CO'PPERAS. n. f. [koperwas, Dut. couperose, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for coppras is an artificial vitriol, made of the [illegible] of stones found on the seashore in Devonshire, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in heaps above ground, and receive the rains and dews which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, by boiling, dissolves. This fastitious efflorescence, in many respects agrees with the native green vitriol.
Woodward's Fossils

It may be questioned, whether [illegible] can be [illegible] and the [illegible] Boyle

COPPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Copse. n. ſ. [abbreviated from coppice.] A low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with ſhort wood.

The eaſt quarters of the ſhire are not deſtitute of copſe woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copſe be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the ſame aſhes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copſe they lay,
His eye by certain level could ſurvey Dryden.

To Copse. v. a. [from the noun.] To preſerve underwoods.

The neglect of copſing wood cut down, hath been of very evil conſequence. Swift.

CO'PULA. n. ſ. [Latin.] The word which unites the ſubject and predicate of a propoſition: as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a propoſition; it repreſents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COʼPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of cuſtom, ſimple and ſeparate, be great, the force of cuſtom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To Coʼpulate. v. n. To come together as different ſexes.

Not only the perſons to copulating are infected, but alſo their children. Wiſeman.

Copula'tion. n. ſ. [from copulate.] The congreſs or embrace of the two ſexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneſt. Hooker.

Coʼpulative. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propoſitions are thoſe which have more ſubjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honour are temptations to pride; Cæſar conquered the Gauls and the Britains; neither gold nor jewels will purchaſe immortality. Watts.

COʼPY. n ſ. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuipium facta eſt copia exſcribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κοπος, labour; becauſe, ſays he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A tranſcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's ſelf were loſt, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Dennam.

He ſtept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but alſo the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or repreſentation of the Deity in ſmall South's Sermons.

The Romans having ſent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the beſt laws, choſe ten ſignificant to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no ſmall charge, as they could not be had otherwiſe than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our converſence;
In bed he ſlept not for my urging;
At board he fed not for my urging it. Shakſ.

Let him firſt learn to write, after a copy, all the ſcrews in the vulgar alphabet. Locke.

The firſt of them I have forgotten, and cannot fully retrieve, becauſe the copy is at the preſs. Dryden.

4. An inſtrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'ſt that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy 's not eternal Shak.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

Copy-book. n. ſ. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

Copy-hold. n. ſ [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to ſhow but the copy of the rolls made by the ſteward of his lord's court: for the ſteward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, ſo he regiſters ſuch tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the tranſcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-hold is called a baſe tenure, becauſe it holds at the will of the lord, yet not ſimple, but according to the cuſtom of the manor: ſo that if a copy-holder breaks not the cuſtom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleaſure. Theſe cuſtoms of manors vary, in one point or other, almoſt in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and ſome certain, that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleaſes, when the tenant is admitted into it, that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places cuſtomary; becauſe the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the cuſtomary fine, as two ſhillings for an acre, or ſo, cannot be denied his admiſſion. Some copy-holders have, by cuſtom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demeſne: and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if ſuch a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vaſtum, as in caſe of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land eſcheats to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a cuſtomary tenant die, the widow ſhall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addiſon.

Copy-holder. n. ſ. [from copyhold.] One that is poſſeſſed of land in copy-hold.

To Coʼpy. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tranſcribe; to write after an original: it has ſometimes out, a kind of pleonaſm.

He who hurts a harmleſs neighbour's peace,
Who lives a lye, ſame ſlander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope.

2. To imitate: to propoſe to imitation; to endeavour to reſemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this deſign of copying it out, poſſeſſes himſelf of one of the greateſt advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and then ſafely blame
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryden.

To copy her few nymphs aſpir'd,
Her virtues fewer dwarfs admir'd. Swift.

To Coʼpy. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of ſomething elſe.

Some imagine, that whatſoever they find in the picture of a maſter, who has acquired reputation, muſt of neceſſity be excellent, and never fail, when they dare, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

2. It has ſometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryd.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, ſeem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addiſon's Spectator.

To Coque'r. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderneſs.

You are coqueting the ſtranger, my lord looking on to ſee how the grandees pay, and I taking at you both. Swift.

To Coque'r. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandiſhments.

Phryne, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,
I ſaw coquetting t'other night,
In public, with a hideous knight. Swift.

Coque'try. n ſ [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectation of amorous advances; deſire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could deſire in female companions, without a dram of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addiſon.

COQUE'TTE. n. ſ. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in ſylphs aloft repair,
And ſpirit and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are parkied. Arbuth.

Co'racle. n. f. [cwrwgle, Welſh; probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat uſed in Wales by fiſhers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardneſs and ſtony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long expoſure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is ſoft while in the ſea, proceeds from a ſoft and thin coat, of a cruſtaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for uſe. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variouſly ramified. It is thickeſt at the ſtem, and its branches grow gradually ſmaller. It grows to rocks, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourihment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and ſeeds, or at leaſt a matter analogous to ſeeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the ſea, upon the moſt weſt of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a ſtirpa ine plant; it hath no leaves; it branceth only when it is under water. It is ſoft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and ſhining red, as we ſee. Bacon.

This gentleman, deſirous to find the nature of coral, caſted a net to go down a hundred fathom into the ſea, with expreſs orders to take notice whether it were hard or ſoft in the place where it groweth. Fuller's Holy State.

He hears the cracking ſound of ſtruggling waves,
And ſees the ſecret ſource of unbeheld floods

A [illegible] was ſeen to ſtand
Within the main, of alabaſter white,
And crimſon coral, for the queen of ſea,
Who takes in Sylvan ſports her chief delight.
Dryden.

Or where's the ſcale, that can the gold reſiſt,
The coral ſtrong, or the pearl orient? Pope.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to aſſiſt them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's whiſtle next it grew,
The bells the gingle, and the coral drew. Pope.

Coral-tree. n. f. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and grows to a beautiful ſcarlet flower that never ripens ſeeds in the European gardens. Miller.

Co'rralline. adj. [coralinus, Lat.] Conſiſting of coral; approaching to coral.

At ſuch time as the ſeed is ripe, it takes up into itſelf terreſtrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, before it fell again, as it becomes coral. Woodward.

Co'rralline. n. f. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a capillaceous plant, but muſt refer to the coral to be duſky, ſometimes greeniſh, ſometimes yellowiſh, often reddiſh, and frequently white. Ibid.

In Falmouth there is a ſort of ſand, or rather coralline, that breeds under the water. Mortimer.

Co'rralloid. } adj. [κοραλλοειδης.]
Co'rralloidal. } Reſembling coral.

Now if ſtones and ſpecial bodies may indurate under the water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The petaloid, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are compoſed of pieces ſet lengthways of the body, and paſſing from the ſurface to the axis of it. Woodward on Foſſils.

Cora'nt. n. f. [courant, Fr.] A lofty ſprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a coranto well than a jigg; ſo in converſation, even, eaſy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as ſoon believe a widow in great grief for her huſband, becauſe I ſaw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walſh.

Co'rban. n. f. [קרבן] An alms-baſket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to ſatisfy all obligations to duty by ſome corbans of religion. King Charles.

Corban ſtands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews ſometimes ſwore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to uſe it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his tythe and moſtacle, was declared corban, he was not legally compelled to allow them neceſſary ſubſiſtence. Even debtors were permitted to demand their creditors, by conſecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the goſpel, with their inſatiable and irreligious vows. By this word ſuch perſons were likewiſe meant, as devoted themſelves to the ſervice of God and his temple. Corban ſignifies alſo the treaſury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were depoſited. Calmet.

Corbe. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked.

For lowe my head very tottered is,
Sy thy corbe ſhoulder it leans amiſs. Spenſer.

And who to aſſiſt but a grave [illegible]
Swift.

CO'RDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increaſes the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.
2. Any medicine that increaſes ſtrength.

A [illegible], properly ſo called, is what increaſeth the force of the heart and arteries, by increaſing the ſpirits, the animal may be weakened as in a flammatory diſeaſe. Whatſoever increaſeth the natural or animal ſpirits, either by way of moving the fluids and muſcles, is a cordial: of this ſort are ſuch medicines as bring the blood into the proper circulation, as the right conſtitution and mixture of it, as both in the ſame faſhioned, mild, ripe fruits, and whatever endued with a wholeſome balſamick nature. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with ſome cordials ſeek to appeaſe
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my ſelf will ſeek thy ſafety out,
But ſuch ſweet cordials pain paſt phyſicians cure.
Spenſer.

Cordials of pity give me now,
For I too weak for purges grow.
Your war on me is rage that upheld the crown.
The ſcarlet hangman of treaſon, a ſceptred gown,
And the moſt pleaſing ſight the land had,
Charms to my ſight, and cordials to my mind.
Dryden.

Co'rdial. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; reſtorative.

It is of my Maker, which is the water I ſye times redeemed from death. I do not know What is more cordial. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which were infuſed ſome precious ingredients. Bacon.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocriſy.

Deſtroyers of unfolded and cordial virtues, who are apt to obſtruct or intercept the cordial ſupplications of ſuch an life of ſanctity, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He, with looks of cordial love,
Hung ever her ornament'd. Milton.

Cordia'lity. n. f. [from cordial]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any ſuch reſpects of cordiality, or reference into the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocriſy.

Co'rdially. adv. [from cordial] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocriſy.

Where a ſtrong inveterate love of ſin has made any doctrine or propoſition wholly unſuitable to the heart, no argument or demonſtration, no miracle whatſoever, ſhall be able to bring the heart cordially to cloſe with, and receive it. South's Sermons.

CORE. n. f. [cœur, Fr. cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man
That is not paſſion's ſlave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.
Shakſpeare's Hamlet

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the ſquare ſhe raiſed a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.
Dig out the corer below the ſurface. Mortimer.
They waſteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.
Thomſon.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or ſtone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or ſore.

Launce the ſore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The ſecret vice is fed, and gathers round.
Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is uſed by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raiſing of forces to reſiſt the rebels, than of the reſiſtance itſelf; for that he was in a core of people whoſe affections he ſuſpected. Bacon's Henry VII

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

CORI'NTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by ſome the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the moſt noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius aſcribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian ſculptor, who is ſaid to have taken the hint by paſſing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a baſket with ſome of her playthings had been placed by her nurſe, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it ſprung up, the branches encompaſſed the baſket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the baſket by the vaſe of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vitalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whoſe leaves were thoſe of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little ſtalks ariſe, of which the ſixteen volutes are formed, which ſupport the abacus. Harris.

Behind theſe figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Five pounds, if night'y tipt, would set me clear
Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and senteries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

CO'RPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint soldiers with their corporal load,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied. Shakspeare.

Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this. Shakspeare

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains; and therefore are stronger to all those anxious and tormenting passions which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Addison.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporeal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air, and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shakspeare

And if in these corporal instruments, perhaps,
You have not sway enough to quit your Milton

CORPORA'LITY. n. s. [from corporal.] The quality of being imbodied.

It is right to call the not spiritual, yet of a purer consistence than to spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all others the most subtile and pure. Raleigh's Apology.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, to overturn all Municipal and Corporate rights, and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate body, therefore the resolution of the commons was already turned against particular persons. Swift

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at full. Shakspeare

CO'RPORATENESS n. s. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORA'TION. n. s. [from corpus, Lat.] A body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves and of society with men Hooker.

Of this we find some foot steps in our law,
Which does derive its custom from God and nature take;
To which for time the rest together draw,
And by their common good corporations make. Davies.

CORPOREITY n. s. [from corpus, Lat.] The state of being imbodied. Dict.

CORPO'REAL adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; material; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The various modes of those endless attribute,
Though infinite, to his own power co'd,
That to corporeal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Par. Lost

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are next to count those characters that God impressed upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. Tillotson.

The counsels fulfil'd which they fates decreed,
And freed from by corporeal prison freed. Dryd.

To my corporeal and internal eye
On the young child, or new engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Ambury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a pointed one. Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. s. [from corporeus, Lat.] Materiality; the quality of being imbodied; the state of having a body; bodilmess.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances 'twixt the soul and the body, they must a mist of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and the lower of corporeity. Glanville's Scepsis.

Two are attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stilling fleet.

CORPORIFICA'TION. n. s. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To CO'RPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To imbody; to unspiritate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORPS. }
CORPSE. } n. s. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

1. A body.

The dead corpse
Laid first in earth, may like a wicked seed,
Perish in the ground, so from the weeds
Of sinful flesh may a fair body spring. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though I lose out, all too little seems
To shut this man, this vast unbinde-bound corps.
Milton

He looks as man was made with face erect,
That seems this mortal corps, and seems asham'd
He's not a spirit. Dryden.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend
Greet my poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakspeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And recent death in mould'ring shapes display'd.
Dryden's Fables.

See where the corpse of thy dead son appears.
Addison.

The corpse was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and march about the dead body. Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Could numbers count the frailties of the corps,
Her corps of frailty, and the soul reveal'd.
Dryden.

5. A body of forces.

CO'RPULENCE. } n. s. [corpulentia, Lat.]
CO'RPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To wear a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdenous corpulence, my love had grown.
Donne.

It is but one species of corpulency, for there may be lank wolves as fat, from the great quantity of insipid flesh, the diet of rabid people.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves to the dilatation of the part: the corpulency and tenacity of the water resisting a great force to dilate it. Ray.

CO'RPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy style, when there is much periphrasis, and circuit of words; and when, with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the cattle corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CO'RPUSCLE n. s. [corpusculum, Lat.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.
Newton.

Who knows what are the figures of the least corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Wotton's Logick.

CORPU'SCULAR. } adj. [from corpusculum, Latin.]
CORPUSCU'LARIAN. }

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be said, and the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripatetics. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure true in itself, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley.

3. Shelter; defence from weather.
In the mean time, by being compelled to lodge in the fields, which grew now to be very cold, whilst his army was under cover, they might be forced to retire. Clarendon.

Co'VER-SHAME. n. s. [cover and shame.] Some appearance used to conceal infamy.
Does he put on holy garments for a cover-shame of lewdness? Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Co'VERING. n. s. [from cover.] Dress; vesture; any thing spread over another.
The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth. 2 Sam.
Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shakspeare.
Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;
Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass. Cowley.
Thus from the sea she rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread. Dryd.
Sometimes proverbs cast things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it. South.

Co'VERLET. n. s. [couverclit, Fr.] The outermost of the bed clothes; that under which all the rest are concealed.
Lay her in lilies and violets,
And silk in curtains over her display,
And all her bed with roses and sweet violets. Spenser.
This coverlet, the last provided bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread.
Dryden's Fables.
I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet. Swift.

Co'VERT. n. s. [from cover; covert, Fr.]
1. A shelter; a defence.
Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler. Isaiah.
There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Isaiah.
They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont. Milton.
It was the hour of night, when thus the Son
Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven. Milton.
Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert. Evelyn's Calendar.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.
Tow'rds him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood. Shaksp.
I shall be your faithful guide,
Through this gloomy covert wide. Milton.
Thence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves.
Dryden.
Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.
The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert:
Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey.
Addison's Cato.

Co'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.]
1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.
You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon.
The sea is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Mortimer.
Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.
And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered. Shakspeare.
By what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Co'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband: as covert baron, feme covert.
Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself! to have my body disabled, and my head hot fired! Dryden.

COVERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.]
It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the besieged palisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counterscarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

Co'VERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.
Yet that Aragnol (so his foe was hight)
Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise. Spenser.
How can'st thou cruise this marriage?——
——Not honestly, my Lord; but covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me. Shakspeare.
Amongst the poets, Persius covertly derides at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden.

Co'VERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. Dict.

Co'VERTURE. n. s. [from covert.]
1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

He saw their shame, that sought
Vain coverture. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls, or other like coverture. Woodward.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowell.
The infancy of king Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

To CO'VET. v. a. [convoiter, French.]
1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.
If it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending man alive. Shakspeare.
I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith. Shakspeare Macbeth.
O father! can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the gen'rous mind releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath?
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To desire earnestly.
All things covet as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation. Hooker.
But covet earnestly the best gifts. 1 Cor.

To Co'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.
The love of money is the root of all evil, which whilst some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. 1 Tim.

Co'VETABLE. adj. [from covet.] To be wished for; to be coveted. Dict.

Co'VETISE. n. s. [convoitise, French.] Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.
Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,
Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covetise.
Fairy Queen.

Co'VETOUS. adj. [convoiteux, French.]
1. Inordinately desirous; eager.
With encumber'd with my dropping cloths like,
The cruel matron, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden's Æneis.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.
An heart they have exercised with covetous practices. Peter.
What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must pass no words, for he is covetous. Shakspeare.
Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasonings, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.
Such a wife was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue. Shakspeare.
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this fair soul shall be.
He that is envious or angry at a virtue in another, does not hurt him, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation; and then his intentions are polluted. Taylor.

Co'VETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous.] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it? Shakspeare.

Co'VETOUSNESS. n. f. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ambition to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense. Taylor's Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it to the earth. Tillotson.

2. Eagerness; desire: in a neutral sense.

Such workmen strive to do better than well, They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakspeare's King John.

Co'VEY. n. f. [couvée, French.]

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wasps and cockers, as partridges went to a farmer, and begged a hopper him to quench their thirst. L'Estrange.

A covey of partridges springing in our faces, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

There would be no walking in a shady wood without springing a covey of birds. Addison.

COUGH. n. f. [kuch, Dutch.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced coff.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore, While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore. Smith.

To COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dutch.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou dost ride
The stale of horses, and the gilded puppelle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakspeare.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Shakspeare.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of calling it up by coughing. Ray on the Creation.

I cough like Horace, and tho' lean, am short. Pope's Epistles.

To COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs; then into the arteria arteria, or weasand; and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wiseman's Surgery.

Co'UGHER. n. f. [from cough.] One that coughs. Dict.

Co'VIN. } n. f. A deceitful agreement
Co'VINE. } between two or more, to the hurt of another. Cowell.

COULD. [the imperfect preterit of can.] Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I could and desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto. 2 Mac.

What if he did not all the ill he could?
Am I oblig'd by that t'assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden.

Co'ULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The sharp iron of the plough, which cuts the earth perpendicular to the share.

The Philistines went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Samuel.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clay is long and broad; and the coulter long and very little bending, with a very sharp wing. Mortimer.

CO'UNCIL. n. f. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness. Matthew.

The Assyrian council thus resolv'd; and forth In order came the grand infernal peers. Milton.

In factions composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of cruelties, and professing a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table. Addison.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The people call'd heralds call
To council in the city gates: anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assembly, and harangues are heard. Milton.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some deviated from the religion from the fathers of the christian church, or from their synods or councils. Wits.

4. Persons call'd together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus admitted, are more properly a council to the king the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people than a court. Bacon.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge
Either of king or council, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal. Shakspeare.

COUNCIL-BOARD. n. f. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were obliged to trust. Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
Must yield to her foe the stronger cause;
A shame to one so much adorn'd
For wisdom at Jove's council-board. Swift.

CO'UNSEL. n. f. [consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. Bacon.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament. Clarendon.

Bereave me not,
Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

I hold as little council with weak fear
As you, or any Scot that lives. Shakspeare.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess, therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hooker.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

And, bold as were his countrymen to fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading proſe,
And ſet their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The Britiſh ſoldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not conſider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addiſon on the War.

2. A ruſtick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have buſineſs to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a huſbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Eſtrange.

Co'UNTY. n. ſ. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A ſhire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the adminiſtration of juſtice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a ſheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of theſe counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaſter, Cheſter, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a juriſdiction of ſo high a nature, that the chief governors of theſe, by ſpecial charter from the king, ſent out all writs in their own names, and did all things touching juſtice as abſolutely as the prince himſelf, only acknowledging him their ſuperior and ſovereign. But this power has, by a ſtatute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewiſe counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to beſtow extraordinary liberties. Of theſe London is one, York another, the city of Cheſter a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to theſe may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingſton upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordweſt, and the county of Lichfield. County, in another ſignification, uſed for the county-court. Cowel.

Diſcharge your powers unto their ſeveral counties,
As we will ours Shakſpeare.

He caught his death the laſt county aſſizes, where he would go ſee juſtice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherleſs children. Addiſon's Spectator.

2. An earldom.

3. [comté.] A count; a lord. Obſolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris. Shakſpeare

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Cheſter, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the ſame ita libere ad gladium. Juſtitiarius tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Dugdale.

COUPE'E. n. ſ. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and ſuſpended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

CO'UPLE. n. ſ. [couple, French; copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my ſtable-ſtand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her,
Than when I feel and ſee no further truſt her. Shakſpeare.

It is in ſome ſort with friends as it is with dogs in couples: they ſhould be of the ſame ſize and humour. L'Eſtrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of ſhepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A ſchoolmaſter, who ſhall teach my ſon and yours, I will provide; yea, though the three do coſt me a couple of hundred pounds. Aſcham.

A piece of cryſtal incloſed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were ſhaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addiſon on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So ſhall all the couples three,
Ever true in loving be. Shakſpeare.

Oh! alas!
I loſt a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have ſtood, begetting wonder, as
You gracious couple do. Shakſpeare.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to ſee one another naked. Bacon.

He ſaid: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All ſucceeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley.

To Co'UPLE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntſman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakſpeare

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in ſtore,
To couple coming harms with ſorrow paſt. Sidney.
And wherelo'er we went, like Juno's twins,
Still we went coupled and inſeparable. Shakſ.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus.

They behold your chaſte converſation coupled with fear. 1 Peter.

The ſe concernments were ſo coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reaſon, who is meaſuring ſyllables and coupling rhimes, when he ſhould be mending his own ſoul, and ſecuring his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I ſhall rejoice to ſee you ſo coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your ſatisfaction. Sidney

I am juſt going to aſſiſt with the archbiſhop, in degrading a prieſt who couples all our beggars, by whom I ſhall make one happy man. Swift

To Co'UPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers ſorts of beaſts come from ſeveral parts to drink; and in being refreſhed, fall to couple, and many times with ſeveral kinds. Bacon

Thou, with thy luſty crew,
Caſt wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race Milt.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reaſon of the meeting together of hutes of ſeveral ſpecies, at water, and the promiſcuous couplings of males and females of ſeveral ſpecies. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance,
Let tygers march with hinds, and wolves with ſheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. ſ. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his buſineſs to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd ſuch numbers hand in hand. Swift.

Co'UPLET. n. ſ. [French.]

1. Two verſes; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they caſt away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would uſe in ſinging ſome ſhort couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half ſhould anſwer Sidney.

Then at the laſt, an only couplet fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a ſigh I wiſh it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More ſenſe than I can do in ſix,
It gives me ſuch a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are diſclos'd,
His ſilence will ſit drooping. Shakſpeare

CO'URAGE. n. ſ. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; ſpirit of enterpriſe.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no reliſh of them. Shakſpeare

Their diſcipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shakſpeare.

Hope arms their courage; from their walls they throw
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from conſtitution, very often ſo takes a man when he has occaſion for it, and when it is only a kind of inſtinct in the ſoul, it breaks out on all occaſions, without judgment or diſcretion. That courage which ariſes from the ſenſe of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reaſon. Addiſon's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cauſe of their miſfortune. Swift.

COURA'GEOUS. adj. [from courage]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterpriſing; adventurous; hardy; ſtout.

A pair of courſers, born of heavenly breed:
Who from their noſtrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe ſtole from her celeſtial ſire. Dryd.

The impatient courſer pants in every vein,
And, pawing, ſeems to beat the diſtant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already croſs'd,
And, ere he ſtarts, a thouſand ſteps are loſt.
Pope

2. One who purſues the ſport of courſing hares.

A leaſh is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courſer leads his greyhound. Harmer.

COURT. n. ſ. [cour, Fr. hoert, Dutch; curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince reſides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and ſquires,
Men ſo diſſolute, ſo debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn: epicuriſm and luſt
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakſpeare.

It ſhall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Iſaiah.

His exactneſs, that every man ſhould have his due, was ſuch, that you would think he had never ſeen a court: the politeneſs with which this juſtice was adminiſtered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior.

A ſuppliant to your royal court I come. Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where juſtice is adminiſtered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakspeare.

St Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to insinuate on those magistrates a favourable opinion. Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts; a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished with little towers, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall. Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bed-chamber, yet the inclosed room in the court must come no disputed by passengers, more than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter that it should be so) for fear the siege should be cleared, and the scenes broken. Dryden.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, and advise them. Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held forth a court at Durot-like. Shakspeare.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf. Spectator.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did regard.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never base? Did love never bend
Thy stiffer virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and lay it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryden.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves. Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such all success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter openly in writing. Swift's Gulliver.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it still flies you;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you. Ben Jonson.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Æneid.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Marcia, wouldst not first court a wife's ear danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Addison's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned. Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtezan. Shaksp.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind: nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things. Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtezan. Wotton.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtezan, spent his whole estate upon her. Addison.

CO'URTESY. n. s. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.
Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers. Peacham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kinds of people, brought himself to a habit of negligence and even of rudeness, towards the queen. Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, where it first was nam'd
And planted. Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spur'd me such a day; another time
You call me dog; and, for those courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money. Shakspeare.

Reprove you there, while I to the house repair
Return, and force their scanted courtesy. Shak.

When I was all at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. Shakspeare.

Other Parts, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not playing for the first blow, or not accepting; Polyphemus's courtesy, to be last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, to come to a courtesy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, superstitious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesy as if I had been her godmother: the truth is, I endeavoured to make her look something chamber-like. Congreve's Will Honeycomb.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others: as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowell.

To CO'URTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

The egg itself deserves our notice; its parts within, and its crusty coat without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

2. Sturdy; morose; snappish: a low word.

CRUTCH. n. s. [croccia, Italian; croce, French; crucke, German.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, cruel king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakspeare.

Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch!
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

On these new crutches let them learn to walk.
Dryden's Georgicks.

Tir'd and defeat, they rely less aid call'd wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.

Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong
Smith.

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe
Pope.

2. It is used for old age.

Beauty doth varnish age, as if new born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. Shakspeare.

To CRUTCH. v. a. [from crutch.] To support on crutches as a cripple.

I hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse.
Dryden.

To CRY. v. n. [crier, French.]

4. To proclaim; to make publick.

Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem. Jeremiah.

5. To exclaim.

Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
Shakspeare.

What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate? Shakspeare.

If dicelings, mistressings, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee. Hall.

Lysimachus having obtained the victory, seeing his ships and machines, furnished at all, contrivance, cried out, that they were built by more than human art. Arbuthnot on Coins.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came crying hither;
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawle and cry. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Isaiah.

When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men. Tillotson.

7. To squall, as an infant.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born,
And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Dryden.

Thus, in a starry night, fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.

He struggles hard for breath, and cries for air,
Then nestles in his mother's lap and hides
The child certainly knows, that the wheat-feed or mustard-feed it receives, is not the apple or sugar it cries for.

8. To weep; to shed tears.

Her who still weeps with spungy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries. Donne.

9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.

He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Psalms.

The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Joel.

10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.

He cried upon it at the meerest loss.
Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Shakspeare.

To CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.

She seeks, she sighs, but no where spies him
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Crashaw.

To CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.

Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there is atheism in it. Watts.

Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it.
Tillotson.

2. To prohibit.

By all means cry down that unworthy custom of late times, that they should pay money. Bacon.

3. To overbear.

I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence. Shakspeare.

To CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.

They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Job.

With that Susanna cried with a loud voice, and the two elders cried out against her. Susanna.

2. To complain loudly.
We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration. Atterbury.
3. To blame; to cenſure: with of, againſt, upon.
Are theſe things then neceſſities?
Then let us meet them like neceſſities;
And that ſame word even now cries out on us. Shakſpeare.
Giddy cenſure
Will then cry out of Marcius: oh, if he
Had borne the buſineſs. Shakſpeare.
Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard. Job.
Cry out upon the ſtars for doing
Ill offices, to croſs their wooing. Hudibras.
Epiphanius cries out upon it, as rank idolatry, and deſtructive to their ſouls who did it. Stillingfleet.
Tumult, ſedition, and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypotheſis cry out againſt. Locke.
I find every ſect, as far as reaſon will help them, make uſe of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out, it is matter of faith, and above reaſon. Locke.
4. To declare loud.
5. To be in labour.
What! is ſhe crying out?——
——So ſaid her woman; and that her ſuff'rance made
Each pang a death. Shakſpeare's Henry VIII.

To CRY up. v. a.
1. To applaud; to exalt; to praiſe.
Inſtead of crying up all things which are brought from beyond ſea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom. Bacon.
The philoſopher deſervedly ſuſpected himſelf of vanity, when cried up by the multitude. Glanville's Sceptis.
The aſtrologer, if his predictions come to paſs, is cried up to the ſtars from whence he pretends to draw them. Swift.
They ſlight the ſtrongeſt arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones againſt it. Tillotſon.
He may, out of intereſt, as well as conviction, cry up that for ſacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himſelf cannot be ſafe, nor ſecure. Locke.
Poets, like monarchs, on an eaſtern throne,
Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
Here can cry up, and there as boldly blaſpheme,
And, as they pleaſe, give infamy or fame. Walſh.
Thoſe who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our conſtant ſucceſs at a moſt prodigious rate. Swift.
2. To raiſe the price by proclamation.
All the effect that I conceive was made by crying up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that ſpecies, inſtead of others current here. Temple.

CRY. n. ſ. [cri, French.]

And all the firſt born in the land of Egypt ſhall die, and there ſhall be a great cry throughout all the land. Exodus.
2. Weeping; mourning.
3. Clamour; outcry.
Amazement ſeizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Laocoon juſtly doom'd to die. Dryden.
Theſe narrow and ſelfiſh views have ſo great an influence in this cry, that there are ſeveral of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the riſing of bank-ſtock. Addiſon.
4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other paſſion.
In popiſh countries ſome impoſtor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errours; and ſo the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.
5. Proclamation.
6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be ſold in the ſtreet: as, the cries of London.
7. Acclamation; popular favour.
The cry went once for thee,
And ſtill it might, and yet it may again. Shakſ.
8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expreſſion.
Sounds alſo, beſides the diſtinct cries of birds and beaſts, are modified by diverſity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called time. Locke.
9. Importunate call.
Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jeremiah.
10. Yelping of dogs.
He ſcorns the dog, reſolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He ſtraight reſumes his wonted care. Waller.
11. Yell; inarticulate noiſe.
There ſhall be the noiſe of a cry from the fiſh-gate, and an howling from the ſecond, and a great craſhing from the hills. Zephaniah.
12. A pack of dogs.
About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceaſing bark'd. Milt.
You common cry of curs, whoſe breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens; whoſe loves I prize
As the dead carcaſes of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air. Shakſp. Coriolanus.

CRY'AL. n. ſ. The heron. Ainſworth.

CRY'ER. See CRIER.

CRY'ER. n. ſ. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very ſwift. Ainſworth.

CRY'PTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτικὸς.] Hid-
CRY'PTICK. } den; ſecret; occult; private; unknown; not divulged.
The ſtudents of nature, conſcious of her more cryptick ways of working, reſolve many ſtrange effects into the near efficiency of ſecond cauſes. Glanville's Scepſis.
Speakers, whoſe chief buſineſs is to amuſe or delight, do not confine themſelves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRY'PTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; ſecretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.
We take the word acid in a familiar ſenſe without cryptically diſtinguiſhing it from thoſe ſapors that are akin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [κρύπτω and γράφω.]
1. The act of writing ſecret characters.
2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTO'LOGY. n. ſ. [κρύπτω and λόγος.] Enigmatical language.

CRY'STAL. n. ſ. [κρύσταλλος.]
1. Cryſtals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourleſs bodies, of regularly angular figures, compoſed of ſimple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elaſtick, giving fire with ſteel, not fermenting with acid menſtrua, and calcining in a ſtrong fire. There are many various ſpecies of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Foſſils.
Iſland cryſtal is a genuine ſpar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, ſeldom either blemiſhed with flaws or ſpots, or ſtained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; ſo that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.
Water, as it ſeems, turneth into cryſtal; as is ſeen in divers caves, where the cryſtal hangs in ſtillicidiis. Bacon.
If cryſtal be a ſtone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral ſpirit. Brown.
Cryſtal is certainly known and diſtinguiſhed by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as alſo of its hardneſs, which are ever the ſame. Woodward.
2. Cryſtal is alſo uſed for a factitious body caſt in the glaſs-houſes, called alſo cryſtal glaſs, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glaſs; though it comes far ſhort of the whiteneſs and vivacity of the natural cryſtal. Chambers.
3. Cryſtals [in chymiſtry] expreſs ſalts or other matters ſhot or congealed in manner of cryſtal. Chambers.
If the menſtruum be overcharged, within a ſhort time the metals will ſhoot into certain cryſtals. Bacon.

CRY'STAL. adj.
1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.
Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy cryſtal window ope, look out. Shakſpeare.
2. Bright; clear; tranſparent; lucid; pellucid.
In groves we live, and lie on moſſy beds,
By cryſtal ſtreams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRY'STALLINE. adj. [cryſtallinus, Lat.]
1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.
Mount Oeta to my palace cryſtalline. Shakſp.
We provided ourſelves with ſome ſmall receivers, blown of cryſtalline glaſs. Boyle.
2. Bright; clear; pellucid; tranſparent.
The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; beſides, the pleaſure of the eye, when water is cryſtalline. It is effected by caſting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may ſtrain through them. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
He on the wings of cherub rode ſublime
On the cryſtalline ſky, in ſaphir thron'd
Illuſtrious far and wide. Milton.

CRY'STALLINE Humour. n. ſ. The ſecond humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, oppoſite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the leaſt of the humours, but much more ſolid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both ſides, reſembles two unequal ſegments of ſpheres, of which the moſt convex is on its backſide, which makes a ſmall cavity in the glaſſy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.
The parts of the eye are made convex, and eſpecially the cryſtalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both ſides. Ray.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from cryſtallize.]
1. Congelation into cryſtals.
Such a combination of ſaline particles as reſembles the form of a cryſtal, variouſly modified, according to the nature and texture of the ſalts. The method is by diſſolving any ſaline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it ſtand to ſhoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in ſalt, by reaſon of its ſolidity: whereby, when the menſtruum or fluid, in which ſuch particles flow, is fated enough or evaporated, ſo that the ſaline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they ron into crystals. And this is peculiar to these, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into powder, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them resumes their proper shapes; so that one might as easily discern them to be talcs, as at first sight. This being an unmistakable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Grew.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystals were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, wherefore it continues to form amongst the matter of the strata. Woodw.

To Cry'stallize. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copperas over the fire, or that of mine, you may, by after-evaporation, obtain a goodly store. Boyle.

To Cry'stallize. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outstare the fiercest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear. Shakspeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakspeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cub, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had toss'd,
One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much of size to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wit thou be,
When time hath sown a grizzle on thy case?
Or wail not else thy craft to quickly grow,
That time own tup shall be thine overthrow? Shakspeare.

O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwell's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To Cub. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cubb'd in a cabbin, on a matress laid,
On a brown gaberdine with Lady swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or a more impure cup. Dryden.

Cuba'tion. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Dict.

Cu'batory. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

Cu'bature. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from cubus, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See Cubick Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew.

Cube Root. } n. f. The origin of a
Cu'bick Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

Cu'beb. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromatick smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

A mixture, as of cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, will make your indifferent poor wines, to counterfeit those of Spain. Bacon.

Cu'bical. } adj. [from cube]
Cu'bick. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubick feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of one inch to burn in it above an hour before it be extinct. Hooke's Micrographia.

It is also above a hundred different regular particular throws, that you do not call any two different faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Peacham's Gentleman.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a man's stature arithmetically innate, there must be a duplate ratio, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the fifteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long, a plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

Cu'bicalness. n. f. [from cubical] The state or quality of being cubical.

Cubi'cular. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Curtains, by degrees, changed their shapes and beds into chambers, and introduced a fashion to go from one room to bed. Brown.

Cu'biform. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

Cu'bit. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the top of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature: and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height, and heap'd. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbuthnot.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce half-reach'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

Cu'bital. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Cu'ckingstool. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

I see mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Butler.

Cu'ckold. n. f. [cocu, French, from cuckoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world, why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make himself monarch? I should venture purgatory for it. Shakspeare.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in's absence. Shakspeare.

For though the law makes null the adulteress deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.

Ever since the reign of king Charles the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded aldermen branched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To Cu'ckold. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou can'st cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakspeare.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife, chaste matron,
Nor trust in streets with amorous pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden.

Cu'ckoldly. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not:
Yet I wrong him to call him poor, they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

Cu'ckoldmaker. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakspeare.

One Heim dies, a cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Cu'ckoldom. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

Several taking out nothing but her colours and counterfeiting cuckoldom against me. Dryden.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. A Collection of Jests.

Cu'ckoo. n. f. [cucul, Lat. cwc by Welsh; cocu, French; cokkoek, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was also to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopſa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, meſſenger of ſpring,
His trumpet ſhrill hath thrice already ſounded. Spenſer.

The plainſong cuckoo gray,
Whoſe note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not anſwer, nay. Shakſpeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed, ere ſummer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakſpeare

I deduce
From the firſt note the hollow cuckoo ſings,
The ſymphony of ſpring; and touch a theme
Unknown to fame, the paſſion of the grove. Thomſon

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a wretch art thou, then, to praiſe him ſo for running!—A horſeback, ye cuckoo!—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakſ.

CU'CKOO-BUD. } n. ſ. [cardamimus, Latin.] The name
CU'CKOO-FLOWER. } of a flower.

When daiſies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows with delight. Shakſp.

Nettles, cuckoo flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds Shakſpeare

CU'CKOO-SPITTLE. n. ſ. [cuckoo and ſpittle.] Cuckoo-ſpittle, or wood-ſear, is that ſpume or dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, eſpecially about the joints of lavender and rotemary; obſervable with us about the latter end of May Evelyn's Kalendar.

CU'CULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, Latin]
CU'CULLATED. }

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.
2. Having the reſemblance or ſhape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vul. Er.

CU'CUMBER. n. ſ. [cucumis, Lat.] The name of a plant, and alſo of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower conſiſting of one ſingle leaf, bell-ſhaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many ſegments; of which ſome are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large ſtyle in the middle, charged with the farina; others are female, or fruitful, being faſtened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleſhy fruit, for the moſt part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, incloſing many oblong ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turky cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the ſurface creep,
With crooked bodies, and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CUCURBITA'CEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.] Cucurbitaceous plants are thoſe which reſemble a gourd; ſuch as the pumpion and melon. Chambers

CU'CURBITE. n. ſ. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical veſſel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glaſs, in the ſhape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite. Quincy.

I have, for curioſity's ſake, diſtilled quick-ſilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glaſs head. * * Boyle on Colours.

To CU'DDLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie cloſe; to ſquat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low behind the brake;
Nor would the ſtay, nor dare ſhe fly. Prior

CU'DGEL. n. ſ. [kudſe, Dutch.]

1. A ſtick to ſtrike with, lighter than a club, ſhorter than a pole.

The twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was uſed by the captains of armies, amongſt the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon

Do not provoke the rage of ſtones
And cudgel heavily hide and bones:
Tremble and live. Hudibras.

The aſs was quickly given to underſtand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one poſture and the other. L'Eſtrange.

His ſtout retainers ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the uſe of the rod and the cudgel. Locke

The wiſe Cornelius was convinced, that theſe being liberal arts, could no more be learned by the dancing or cudgel playing Arbuthnot

2. To croſs the CUDGELS, is to forbear the conteſt, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much eaſier to give way, than it would be to croſs the cudgels, and to be cuffed in the concluſion. L'Eſtrange

To CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a ſtick.

My Lord, I ſpeaks moſt freely of you, like a fou mountned man as he is; and ſaid he would cudgel you. Shakſpeare's Henry IV.

The ass courting his miſtreſs, juſt as the ſpaniel had done, inſtead of being ſtroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtſhip. Scott.

Three duels he fought, three ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife Swift

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakſpeare's Hamlet

A good woman happened to paſs by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and aſked them what they did it for L'Eſtrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to reſiſt a ſtick.

His doublet was of ſturdy buff,
And though not ſword, yet cudgel proof. Hudibras

CU'DWEED. n. ſ. [from cud and weed.] A plant.

CUE. n. ſ. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing: as, the long curl of a wig.
2. The laſt words of a ſpeech, which the player, who is to anſwer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have ſpoken your ſpeech, enter into that brake, and ſo every one according to his cue. Shakſpeare

3. A hint; an intimation; a ſhort direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he ſhould weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for paſſion
That I have? He would drown the ſtage with tears Shakſpeare.

Let him know how many ſervants there are, of both ſexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the houſe. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the reſt:
Were it my cue to fight, I ſhould have known it
Without a prompter. Shakſpeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the laſt Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUE'RPO. n. ſ. [Spaniſh.] To be in cuerpo is to be without the upper coat, or cloak, ſo as to diſcover the true ſhape of the cuerpo or body.

Expoſ'd in cuerpo to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. ſ. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fiſt; a box; a ſtroke.

The prieſt let fall the book,
And as he ſtoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him ſuch a cuff,
That down fell prieſt and book, and book and prieſt. Shakſpeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unleſs the poet and the player went to cuffs in the queſtion. Shakſpeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and ſhe would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbuthnot.

Their own ſects, which now lie dormant, would be ſoon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is uſed of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to ſcuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff to make the rabble ſport.
Dryden's Juvenal.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To ſtrike with the fiſt.

I'll after him again, and beat him.——
——Do, cuff him ſoundly; but never draw thy ſword. Shakſpeare.

Were not you, my friend, abuſed, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To ſtrike with the talons.

Thoſe lazy owls who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would riſe
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The daſtard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who fate in numbers cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they could,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food.
Dryden.

3. To ſtrike with the wings. This ſeems improper.

Howling about the coaſts, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own.
Dryden's Æneid.

CUFF. n. ſ. [coeffe, French.] Part of the ſleeve.

He ruled, at tops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his midwives in a morning gown, band, short cassock, and a peak'd hood. Addison.

CUISAGE. n. s. The making up of swine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places. Cowel.

CUIRASS. n. s. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pierced the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass rash, with such fury sent,
And dyed his bosom with a purple stain. Dryden.

CUIRA'SSIER. n. s. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, casts a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor squadrons of horse,
Nor cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St. George, where he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image of any proper figure. Bruce's Philosophical Journal.

CUISH. n. s. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly armed,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The crested scull, and plume to shade it mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Æneis.

But what had our author to warrant Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be wrote tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CU'LDEES. n. s. [culdei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CU'LLERAGE. n. s. The same plant with arse smart. Ainsworth.

CU'LINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weights may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and cause them presently to fall back again into him, and by that action to cherish his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To these also, by reason of their northern expedition, will be still found to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbuthnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our choicest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shakspeare.

Like the bee culling from every flow'r,
Our waxen cells are pickt with wond'rous pow'r,
Our mouths with nectar. Shakspeare.

I do remember an apothecary
With weedy wreaths, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples. Shakspeare.

If such a moment fortune shall call forth,
Culling out this, her happy minion. Shakspeare.

The counsel of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being culled, as it were, this quintessence extracted. Howel.

What fine flowers of rhetorick thou would'st cull from these trifles! Dryden.

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull.
But what her bounteous lavishness supplies,
Your judgment gathering, in full plenty use,
Culling the best. Dryden.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, the traders in money call out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead to try repast. Prior.

The various offerings of the world appear:
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CU'LLER. n. s. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CU'LLION. n. s. [coglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion. It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakspeare.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt, you cullions. Shakspeare.

CU'LLIONLY. adv. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you, you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shakspeare's King Lear.

CU'LLUMBINE. n. s. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her goodly bosom, like a drawbe by bare,
Her neck, like to a bunch of columbines. Spenser.

CU'LLY. n. s. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allowed to put all tricks upon
Our sex, and we be none? Hudibras.

Yet these fond men may their boasting spare,
They purchase not for long unsophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbuthnot.

To CU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMI'FEROUS. adj. [culmus, and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stock, and are hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in husks. Ray.

There are also several sorts of grass, both of the Cyprus and almiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward.

The properest food of the vegetable kind must be taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants, as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, peas, or beans. Arbuthnot.

To CU'LMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Par. Lost.

CULMINA'TION. n. s. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CU'LPABI'LITY. n. s. [from culpable.] Blamableness.

CU'LPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

Proceed no further 'gainst our uncle Gloster,
Than from true evidence of good esteem
He be approved in practice culpable. Shakspeare.

2. Guilty; with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Ireland.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and so one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CU'LPABLENESS. n. s. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CU'LPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty painfully and carefully, it is not to be expected we should commend ourselves lordly. Taylor.

CU'LPRIT. n. s. [about t'is word there is great dispute. It is cited by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance [it is likely that it is a corruption of Oyez paroit, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appeal'd, and silence thy proclaim,
Then bail the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law was duly urged,
To name the thing that woman most desired. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit, before he is before the judges: by allowing too much, and condemning too far, he may be either valuable and, or pleader; and afterwards he may expiate the error. Pope.

CU'LTER. n. s. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

His fiery culter, that all ploughs commands,
Drives through the sounding plain, and cuts the buried lands. Dryden's Virgil.

To CU'LTIVATE. v. a. [cultivo, Ital.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Their excellent talents employed to your service, with all care of it, he must do nothing to your discretion, and, as the soil is good, and he does not care wearing to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Locke.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were every man as indulgent to our faults,
And patient as we are to our own,
Our minds would then as fit
To make a mild and sociable man,
To cultivate the wildest heart as large
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
To crown it with fairest fruits of life. Rowe.

CULTIVA'TION. n. s. from cultivate.

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An acute sight discovers the common mixture of good and evil, which, by culture and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries.

A foundation of sound sense, and a competent share of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us relish the pleasing. Dryden.

CULTIVA'TOR. n. s. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a good quantity of the seed not any grass sprung up. Bacon.

CU'LTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us ſeed unto our heart, and culture to our underſtanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Eſdras.

Theſe three laſt were ſlower than the ordinary wheat of itſelf, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increaſe freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,
We ought to blame the culture, not the ſoil.
Fix'd to no ſpot is happineſs ſincere. Pope.
They roſe as vigorous as the ſun;
Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomſon.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any paſſion out of a family by culture, as ſkilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler.

To CU'LTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is uſed by Thomſon, but without authority.

CU'LVER. n. f. [columba, Lat. culpne, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Had he ſo done, he had him ſnatch'd away,
More light than culver in the faulcon's fiſt.
Spenſer.

The ſounding culver ſhoots. Thomſon's Spring

CU'LVERIN. n. f. [colouvrine, French.] A ſpecies of ordnance: originally a hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of ſixty-four pounds; a culverin, ſixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

Here a well poliſh'd mall gives us the joy
To ſee our prince his matchleſs force employ;
No ſooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 'tis already more than half the mall;
And ſuch a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a ſmoaking culverin 'twere ſhot.
Waller.

CU'LVERKEY. n. f. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could ſee a girl cropping culverkeys and cowſlips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

To CU'MBER. v. a. [kommeren, lomberen, to diſturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarraſs; to entangle; to obſtruct.

Why aſks he what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd?
You give him death that intercept his haſte.
Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,

The learning and maſtery of a tongue, being uneaſy and unpleaſant enough in itſelf, ſhould not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with ſomething uſeleſs.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance.
Shakſpeare's Timon.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit strictly taken: that is a man's intrinsick, this his current, value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew.

Fashionable; popular.

Oft leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit:
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.
Pope.

Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shakesp.

What is now passing; what is at present in its course: as, the current year.

CU'RRENT. n. s.

A running stream.

The current that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered;
He makes sweet musick with th' enamell'd stones.
Shakspeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quicker, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n has Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in time, like Ister current, 's lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods.
Dryden.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,
While through the sky his shining current strays.
Pope.

In navigation.

Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

Course; progression.

The castle of Cadiz was taken, and Thebes invested by Pachimus the Lacedemonian infidiously; which drew on a resurprise of the castle, recovery of the town, and a current of the war, even unto the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CU'RRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

In a constant motion.

Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

Popularly; fashionably; generally.

Without ceasing.

CU'RRENTNESS. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation.
2. General reception.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her husband in case of refusal. Addison.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Friction make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, if I would curry with master Shallow. Shakspeare.

5. To CURRY Favour. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judged them fit over-abjectly to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels. Hooker.

This humour succeeded so with the pupils, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself. L'Estrange.

CU'RRYCOMB. n. s. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition, and so he would have of strigil and sistrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see them painted in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

To CURSE. v. a. [cunnan, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me. Numbers.

After Solyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly cursed the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast into the sea. Knolles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou
curs'd me:
This imprecation was for Laius' death,
And thou hast wished me like him.
Dryden and Lee.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose
Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those.
Pope.

To CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The silver about which thou curses't, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me. Judges.

CURSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Job.

I never went from your Lordship but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his sire!
Ambitiously sententious! Addison.

CU'RSED. participial adj. [from curse.]

Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the curs'd thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare.

2. Unholy; unsanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come, lady, while heav'n lends us grace,
Let us fly this curs'd place,
Lest the sorcerer us entice
With some other new device;
Not a word or needless sound,
Till we come to our ground. Milton.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.

This curs'd quarrel must be no more renew'd;
Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still,
Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, is allotted to be curs'd;
Destin'd the cruel sins to punish,
Where wounding storms no covert thinks grow.
Prior.

CU'RSEDLY. adv. [from curs'd.] Miserably; shamefully: a low cant word.

Salvation and reformation lies so cursedly hard on the generality of our gentlemen. L'Estrange.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.]

A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued to one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England: particular, is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowell.

It was more notorious for the daintineſs of the proviſion which he ſerved out, than for the maſſineſs of the cloth. Hacket's Life of Archbiſhop Williams.

4. Squeamiſhneſs; faſtidiouſneſs.

Of ſand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath diſcourſed with out any daintineſs. Wotton.

5. Ceremoniouſneſs; ſcrupuloſity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate, which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleaſing to the palate; of exquiſite taſte; delicious.

Higher conſiſtence is required for ſweetneſs, or preſervation of taſte, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute ſenſibility; nice; ſqueamiſh; ſoft; luxurious; tender.

This is the flower, yet the daintieſt ſenſe;
For even the ears of ſuch as have no ſkill
Perceive a diſcord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill.
Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
I'll swear hath corns. Shakſ. Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horſe;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But ſhift away. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languiſhingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My houſe, within the city,
Is richly furniſhed with plate and gold,
Baſons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.
Shakſpeare.

Why ſhould we be ſo cruel to ourſelves,
As to thoſe dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle uſage and ſoft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine; in contempt.

Your dainty ſpeakers have the curſe,
To plead bad cauſes down to worſe. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. ſ.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; ſomething of exquiſite taſte.

Be not deſirous of his dainties, for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.

A worm breedeth in meat, of the ſhape of a large white maggot, which is given as a moſt dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy ſtore,
And unbought dainties of the poor Dryden.

The ſhepherd ſwains, with ſure abundance bleſt,
On the fat dock and rural dainties feaſt. Pope.

2. A word of fondneſs formerly in uſe.

Why that's my dainty; I ſhall miſs thee:
But yet thou ſhalt have freedom. Shakſpeare

There is a fortune coming
Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And ſet thee aloft. Ben Jonſon.

DA'IRY. n. ſ. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy, and this advanced the trade of Engliſh butter. Temple

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Than the coarſe and country faith,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonſon
What ſtores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thouſand lambs that wander o'er the plain
Dryden.

She in gens her flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy bowl Dryden

3. Paſturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well houſewifed, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they do feed upon bread and fleſh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. ſ. [dairy and maid.] The woman ſervant whoſe buſineſs is to manage the milk.

The pooreſt of the ſex have ſtill an eye
To arrow their fortune, equipage:
The dairy-maid eſpares fiſh ſhe likes
The ſmirky taylor, and the cook ſalutes Dryden

Come up quickly, or we ſhall conclude that thou art in love with one of ſir Roger's dairy-maids. Addiſon

DA'ISY. n. ſ. [bæzeneage, day's eye. Chaucer.] A ſpring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the ſtalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is ſcaly and hairy, divided into many ſegments to the very baſe. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, before the petals are fallen off, reſemble obtuſe cones. Miller.

When daiſies pied, and violets blue,
And lady ſmocks all ſilver white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight. Shakſp.

As he paſſed, the woods put forth their bluſſoms, the earth her primroſes and daiſy-eyes to behold him. Howel.

Now hawthorns bloſſom, now the daiſies ſpring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope

This will find thee picking of daiſies, or ſmelling to a lock of hay. Add ſon.

Fair-handed ſpring unboſoms every grace;
Throws out the daiſy, primroſe, violet. Thomſon.

DALE. n. ſ. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toil with ſtorms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'red many a wood, and many a vale. Fairy Queen

Before the downfall of the fiery date,
This dale a praiſing region, no unbleſt,
This dale poſſeſs'd they, and had ſtill poſſeſs'd.
I. le'.

He ſteals along the lonely dale. Thomſon.

DA'LLIANCE. n. ſ. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of careſſes; acts of fondneſs.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the ſtrongeſt oaths are ſtraw
To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakſpeare's Tempeſt.

Not gentle purpoſe, not endearing trifles,
Wanted; not youthful dalliance, as beſeems
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league,
Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike ſpirits will know another way,
And my tired ſteeds and trumpets. Dryden

2. Conjugal converſation.

The giant, terrify'd with the ſound,
Where he was by his Dear Dalliance found,
In haſte came ruſhing forth from inner bow'r.
Fairy Queen

That bower not my neck, where the faithful
Hold dalliance with his fair Egyptian ſpouſe.
Milton.

Thou claim'ſt me not thy fire,
And my fair ſiſter ſhow'ſt me, the dear pledge
Of [illegible] Milton.

3. Delay; procraſtination.

[illegible] gentleman;
And I, [illegible]
—[illegible]
Your [illegible] Shakſpeare.

DA'LLIER. n. ſ. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The [illegible] and pleaſant words, what ſcoffs, [illegible] and with wagers, unpaſſed to be laſt before they were; unpoſed to be made Aſcham

DA'LLOP. n. ſ. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or lump. Not in uſe.

Of hair ever ſo fine and ſoft ye find,
Leave ſtanding a dallop at time ye do bind.
Tuſſer.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuſe one's ſelf with idle play; to loſe time in trifles; to procraſtinate idly.

Take up my meſſage:
If thou ſhouldſt dally half an hour, his life,
With that, and all the force to defend him,
Stands on a ſlender baſe. Shakſpeare. King Lear.

He left the cour, and laying hold
Upon the reins, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madneſs to daly any longer, when our ſouls are at ſtake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thouſand pounds muſt be raiſed, for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange careſſes; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation:
Not dallying with a brace of courtezans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakſp.

3. To ſport; to play; to frolick.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and ſcorns the ſun.
Shakſpeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that confeſſion, wherein he dallied with them, ſhall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wiſdom.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuſe till a proper opportunity.

He ſet down to perform ſervice, not by the hazard of battle at firſt, but by dallying off the time with leſſer ſkirmiſhes. Ancient Hiſtory.

DAME. n. ſ. [from dame, which formerly ſignified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, ſhulde never his dame have been ſlayne. Chaucer.]

1. The mother; uſed of beaſts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmleſs young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loſs
Shakſpeare.

Mother, ſays a ſick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, ſays the old one, what ſhall I go to? L'Eſtrange.

Birds bring but one morſel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than ſeven or eight young in the neſt together, which, out of reaſon of their dams, do all at once, with unſatisfiedneſs, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother, in contempt or deteſtation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the iſſue of Polixenes:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commend them to the fire. Shakſp. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. ſ. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the ſea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Tirſe banks and dams, that like a fereen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with ſo fierce a rage the ſwelling flood
Roars, when no hinds his rapid courſe withſtood
Bears down the dams with unreſiſted ſway,
And ſweeps the cattle and the cots away Dryden.

Let looſe the reins to all your watry ſtore,
Bear down the dams, and open every door
Dryden.

The inſide of the dam muſt be very ſmooth and ſtreight; and if it is made very ſloping on each ſide, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [bemman, pojebemman, Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or ſhut up, water, by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place dam'd up;
And here the ſmug and ſilver Trent ſhall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakſpeare.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Bill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will ſpring.
Cowley.

Boggy lands are fed by ſprings, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and cauſes it to ſpread. Mortimer.

'Tis you muſt drive that trouble from your ſoul;
As ſtreams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakſpeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'ſt it up, the more it burns. Shakſpeare

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black uſurping miſts, ſome gentle taper,
Though a ruſh candle from the wicker hole
Of ſome clay habitation, viſit us
With thy long levell'd rule of ſtreaming light. Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. ſ. [damage, French.]

Miſchief; hurt; detriment.

Great errours and abſurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were ſent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the Engliſh ſubjects unto the Iriſh enemies, by their continual reſort and converſation. Davies.

He repulſed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

Loſs; miſchief ſuffered.

Hope elevates and joy
Brightens his creſt, as when a wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenſes oft to feed two lights, with ſpeed
Glides through the dark, and with an equal mind,
Which comes to him alike, meteor or ſtar,
Picks out with eaſe the ſhorteſt way to his home,
Deeming it beſt; his damage then repaid
Among the faithleſs, faithful only he. Milton.

The value of miſchief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they ſhould be willing to tell all they have in reaſon to the damages which had been ſuſtained by the war. Clarendon.

Reparation of damage; retribution.

The biſhop demanded reſtitution of the goods taken by the Scots, or damages for the time. Bacon.

To me whether, upon exhibiting the ſeveral particulars which I have related to you, I may recover for damages in a court of juſtice. Addiſon.

In law

Any hinderance that a man takes in the lawful proceeding of his cauſe, or any loſs that he ſuſtains in his eſtate, which he is by the courſe of the law entitled to demand. Damages are given for the breach of covenants, for the detaining of debts, and for treſpaſſes, which conſiſt in the non-performance of ſomething agreed or demanded. Damages, in ſtrictneſs, are only the loſs ſuſtained by the wrong done him by the defendant. Cowel.

A juſt judge had awarded due damages to a widow, whoſe only ſon had been murdered; but it was expected that he ſhould add ſomething conſiderable for the affront done to the mother. Addiſon.

DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To endamage; to injure; to impair; to hurt, to harm.

In ſuch time as an immature ſeaſon, or any other accident, may much ſhatter and weaken, or quite diſjoynt and break a ſtock. Evelyn.

DAMAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.] Subject or ſuſceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

Miſchievous; pernicious.

Obſcene and unmodeſt talk is offenſive to the Spirit of God, damageable and infectious to the converſe of our neighbours, and no leſs pernicious to ourſelves. Government of the Tongue.

DAMASCENE. n. ſ. [damaſcenus, from Damaſcus.] A ſmall plum; a damſon, as it is now ſpoken.

They uſe to follow the cherry-tree in bloſſom, then damaſcenes and plum-trees in bloſſom, and laſtly trees in leaf. Bacon.

Theſe fruits were commonly a meaner ſort, as in ſome places damaſcenes; and the choiceſt of all the muſcadel. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. ſ. [damaſquin, Fr. damaſcino, Ital. from Damaſcus.]

1. Linen or ſilk woven in a manner invented at Damaſcus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boaſt
In diaper, damaſk, or in lyne. Spenſer

Wipe your ſhoes, for want of a clout, with a damaſk napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is uſed for red colour in Fairfax, from the damaſk roſe.

And for ſome doubt perplexed was her ſpirit,
Her damaſk late, now chang'd to pureſt white Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon ſtuffs.

2. To variegate; to diverſify.

They ſat recline
On the ſoft downy bank, damaſk'd with flowers Milton

Around him dance the roſy hours,
And damaſking the ground with flow'rs
With ſmells and ſweets perfume the morn. Fenton

3. To adorn ſteel-work with figures; practiſed, I ſuppoſe, firſt at Damaſcus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. ſ. The roſe of Damaſcus; a red roſe. See ROSE.

Damaſk cheeſes have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are to be commanded. Farmer.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor bright advancing ſtreaks, or ſpreading pinks,
Nor, flower'd from every bluſh, the damaſk roſe. Thomſon.

DA'MASKENING. n. ſ. [from damaſquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or ſteel, by making inciſions, and filling them up with gold or ſilver wire: uſed in enriching the blades of ſwords, and locks of piſtols. Chambers.

DAME. n. ſ. [dame, Fr. dama, Spaniſh.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally ſignified a miſtreſs or a lady, and was a title of honour; and it is ſtill ſo uſed by ſchollars, by way of reſpect to their ſchool-miſtreſſes, it repreſents a farmer's wife, or the miſtreſs of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logick.

Fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though your eſtate of honour I am of. Shakſpeare.

Not all theſe lords do vex me half ſo much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakſpeare.

Sometimes with ſecure delight
The upland hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks ſound
To many a youth and many a maid
Dancing in the chequer'd ſhade;
And young and old come forth to play
On a ſunſhine holiday. Milton.

2. It is uſed in poetry, for women of rank.

Here I, more a Laurentian dame
Than Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who was the dame that bleſt that boaſt,
And I expoſed to ſcorn and loſt
For ſuch a dame
But with the ſword of Britomart? Waller.

3. Miſtreſs of a low family.

They kill'd the poor cock, dame, for ſay they, if it were not for his waking our dame, ſhe would not wake us. L'Eſtrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've with thy dames enough; there cannot be
That valour in you to devour ſo many
As will to greateſt dedicate themſelves. Shak.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. ſ. A plant, called alſo queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future ſtate.

It is moſt neceſſary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and ſend to hell forever thoſe facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cauſe to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmoſt lying in his power to it, might not be ignorant of it, ſhall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn; to cenſure.

His own ſhips ſo thought
Will damn, and conſcience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiſs any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themſelves, nor will my muſe deſcend
To clap with fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the greateſt of wits,
Phœbus gives them full privilege above
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are ſo good a critick, that it is the greateſt happineſs of the modern poets that you do not hear their works, and, next, that you are not ſo arrant a critick as to damn them, like the reſt, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deſerving damnation; juſtly doomed to never-ending puniſhment.

It gives him occaſion of laboring with greater earneſtneſs to ſecure, by certainty of reaſon, what is the eſteem of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a dream to me; ſteel'd, as I am for death;
And to ſtand ſtill is the higheſt he is
Were damnable. Shakſpeare.

As he does not reckon every ſpecies of a damnable nature, ſo he is far from cloſing with the new opinion of thoſe who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is ſometimes indecently uſed in a low and ludicrous ſenſe; odious; pernicious.

O thou a damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the noſe for thy ſpeeches? Shakſpeare.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In ſuch a manner as to incur eternal puniſhment; ſo as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propoſe the queſtion, whether thoſe who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Chriſt himſelf, in reſpect of thoſe points that are not ſo? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently uſed in a ludicrous ſenſe; odiouſly; hatefully.

The more ſweets they beſtowed upon them, the more damnably they ſtunk. Decay of Piety.

DAMNATION. n. ſ. [from damn.] Excluſion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal puniſhment.

He that is once all gulfed with the flames of hell, or remembers how often he has been upon the brink of damnation, will be ready to ſtrangle him that ſhall but proffer to take away his life. South's Sermons.

And me by ſpells and charms
Smear'd o'er with dragon's fat, and rotten graves,
Rank of the jaundic'd hag, and ſtinking ſcreech-owl,
To damnation draw. Milton.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a ſentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; deteſtable; abhorred; abominable.

Of hoary hairs, the damn'd ſeducer
Into hell to trap Mankind. Shakſpeare.

Let not the ſword of Denmark be
A cauſe to the leaves and flowers to bleed. Shakſp.

But, O! what damned minutes tells he o'er
Who dotes, yet doubts, ſuſpects, yet ſtrongly loves. Shakſpeare.

Dare not
To break the ſportive virtue of my prince
With fellow's oaths of moſt baſe and damn'd contrivance. Bacon.

DAMNI'FIC, adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loſs; miſchievous.

To DA'MNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cauſe loſs to any.

He, who has ſuffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, ſatisfaction: the damnified perſon has the power of appropriating the goods or ſervice of the offender, by right of ſelf preſervation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he ſaw himſelf ſo freſhly rear,
As if late fight had not him damnified,
He was diſmay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.
Fairy Queen.

DA'MNINGNESS. n. ſ. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to thoſe ſins whoſe he hath had ſuch experience of, to their damnation and damnageance of them, and to make himſelf a compleat penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moiſt; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

See laid to watch the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erſpread with a damp ſweat and holy fear.
Dryden.

2. Dejected; ſunk; depreſſed.

All theſe and more came flocking, but with looks
Downcaſt and damp: yet ſuch wherein appear'd
Obſcure ſome glimpſe of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. ſ.

1. Fog; moiſt air; moiſture.

Night; not now, as e'er man fell,
Wholeſome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

A rift there was, whence from the mountain's height
Convey'd a gloomy and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the ſun, in the hotter ſeaſons, penetrating the cavities of the earth, excites thoſe mineral exhalations in ſubterraneous caverns, which are called damps: theſe ſeldom happen but in the ſummer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depreſſion of ſpirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold ſudden damp
Recov'ring, and his ſcatter'd ſpirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words addreſs'd.
Milton.

His name ſtruck every where ſo great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp
Roſcommon.

Ev'n now, while thus I ſtand bleſt in thy preſence,
A ſecret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.
Addiſon.

An eternal ſtate he knows and confeſſes that he has made no proviſion for, that he is undone for ever: a proſpect enough to caſt a damp over the moſt chearful hours. Rogers.

This commendable reſentment againſt me, ſtruck a damp upon that ſpirit in all ranks and conditions of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

Dread of death hangs over the moſt natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in ſuch purſuits, if they could once reflect, that in ſuch courſe they will be ſure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to diſcourage.

A light body dampeth the ſound much more than a board. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to diſcourage; to dull.

Many dulls and damps of indulgencies, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be ſtirring, if it were not for this ſlug. Bacon.

Unleſs an age too late, or cold
Climate, or years, damp my intended wing
Depreſs'd. Milton.

DA'MPISHNESS. n. ſ. [from damp.] Tendency to wetneſs; fogginess; moiſture.

It hath been uſed by ſome with great ſucceſs to make room walls thick; and to put a lay of coals between the bricks, to take away all dampiſhneſs. Bacon.

DA'MPNESS. n. ſ. [from damp.] Moiſture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampneſs of the ſky
Should clog their wings, and hinder them to fly;
'Twas only water thrown on fowls too dry.
Dryden.

By ſtacks they often have very great loſs, by the dampneſs of the ground, which rots and conſumes it. Mortimer.

DA'MPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; ſorrowful.

The words and geſtures dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of ſuch a tale might raiſe, by applying him with exercites and diſcourſes. Clarendon.

DA'MSEL. n. ſ. [damoiſelle, French.]

Keeneſſe, I my ſervant's ſmiles implore,
And one mad damſel dares diſpute my pow'r.
Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damſels ſhe was gone
In ſhady walks, the ſcorching heat to ſhun.
Dryden.

3. A wench; a country laſs.

The children are whitemeaters, and the damſels warm'd.
Gay.

DA'MSON. n. ſ. [corruptly from damaſcene.] A ſmall black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife deſir'd ſome damſons,
And made me climb with danger of my life.
Shakſpeare.

DAN. n. ſ. [from dominus, as now don in Spaniſh; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now ſay maſter. I know not that it was ever uſed in proſe, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of Engliſh undefil'd.
Dougl.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This ſignior Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid.
Shakſpeare.

Dark, if this ſtory pleaſeth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior.

To DANCE. v. a. [danſer, Fr. danzar, Span. as ſome think from tanza, Arabick, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from δονεω.]

To move in meaſure; to move with ſteps correſpondent to the ſound of inſtruments.

What ſay you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verſes. Shakſpeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with ſuppleneſs and obſequiouſneſs.

Men are ſooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leiſure of their own magiſtrates. Raleigh's Eſſays.

It upbraids you,
To let your father's friends, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience.
Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandſire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakſpeare.

Till I ſee thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart
Than when I firſt my wedded miſtreſs ſaw
Beſtride my threſhold. Shakſpeare's Coriolanus.

In peſtilences, the malignity of the infected vapour dances the principal ſpirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by muſick.

Our dance of cuſtom round about the oak
Of Herne the hunter. Shakſpeare.

The honourableſt part of talk is to give occaſion, and again to moderate and paſs to ſomewhat elſe; for then a man leads the dance.
Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modiſh faſt,
With amorous ſongs and wanton dances grac'd
Dryden.

DA'NCER. n. ſ. [from dance.] One that practiſes the art of dancing.

He at Pharſalia kept
His ſword e'en like a dancer, while it ſtruck
The ſeam and wrinkled Cæſar. Shakſpeare.

Muſicians and dancers take ſome truce
With theſe your pleaſing labours, for great uſe
As much wearineſs as perfection brings. Jonſon.

The earl was ſo far from being a good dancer, That he was no graceful goer. Bacon.

It is a uſual practice for our ſomambulos, or dancers on the rope, to attempt ſomewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

If, perfect dancer! climbs the rope
And balances your fear and hope
Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art
And, veil'd, I found that the muſician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.
Prior.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. ſ. [dance and maſter.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaſter. L'Eſtrange.

The legs of a dancingmaſter, and the hand of a muſician, fall, as it were, naturally, with a thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Underſtanding.

DA'NCINGSCHOOL. n. ſ. [dance and ſchool.] The ſchool where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the Engliſh dancing-ſchools
And teach lavoltas high, and ſwift corantos:
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakſpeare.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-ſchool for the inſtitution of apes of quality.
L'Eſtrange.

DANDELI'ON. n. ſ. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all reſpects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a ſingle naked ſtalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowſlips ſweet, let dandelions ſpread;
For Blouzelinda, blithſome maid, is dead!
Gay's Paſtorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. ſ. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word uſed ſometimes in fondneſs, ſometimes in contempt.

Then ſhall ye ſuck, and ſhall be born upon their ſides, and be dandled upon her knees. Iſaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy ſprights,
Oft ſkip into our chamber thoſe ſweet nights,
And, kiſs'd and dandled on thy father's knee,
Were bid next day to tell what they did ſee.
Donne.

Our cares are but ſuperficial ſchools
To dandle fools. Bacon.

Seeing the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid. Milton.

Many occaſions ſleep, as we find by the common uſe of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurſes arms.
Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

I ſcorn'd that I ſhould be dandled,
And have received for the emperor's heir;
And for the emperor dandle him for his own.
Shakſpeare.

They have put me into a ſilk gown, and a great ſilk cap: I am aſhamed to be ſeen of them and cannot look in the glaſs without laughing, to ſee myſelf turned into ſuch a pretty mall.
Addiſon.

3. To delay; to procraſtinate; to protract by trifles: not in uſe.

Caſtor and Pollux ne'er did wage, and doff,
In ſuch ſtrife, toys: as they would not have one
Drop down. Spenſer.

DA'NDLER. n. ſ. [from dandle.] He that fondles or fondles children.

My conſtant love would dangerouſly be tried. Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I ſhall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerouſneſs of diſeaſes, by the nobleneſs of the part affected. Boyle.

To DA'NGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as hang, hangle, dangle.] To hang looſe and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks.
Shakſpeare.

He 'd rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than in his neck diſgrace to wrangle. Hudib.

Cockle had but one bed; for ſhort, to ſay it,
That bed ſhort: wife's ſhort legs hung dangling out. Dryden.

With dangling hands he ſtrikes the imperial lyre,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.
Swift.

But have you nere with thought beheld
The threat'ning ſword dangle over the ſhield? Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, uſeleſs, harmleſs follower.

The ſtaſh'd ſervants and other knacks that dangle about him, are well inclined to pull down the houſe to ſhare it. Swift.

On the dank and moiſt ground. Shakſpeare.

The dank, and riſing on ſtiff pennons tow'ring
The mounting wheeling eagle. Milton.

Through the thicket, dank and dry
Like a black mail, low creeping, he held on
His way. Milton.

Now all the fields are dank, and walks are mire,
Where late we ſometimes meet, and by the fire
Help out a lame delay. Milton.

By the ruſhy fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the otter dank,
My ſilly, thin, and threadbare cloak
Marks me, in my vow'd
Pilgrim, the ſacred veſt declares t' have hung
My dank and drooping treſſes
To the flood goddeſs. Milton.

To wiſh the ſhunn'd beaſts and ſowls to meet with, would keep them from coming near a man in bad weather. Grew.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

He who can be said was dark, but not
Could want light, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All these works express, according to their degrees of melancholy or enthusiasm, many hard conceits and dismal horrors. Addison.

Dark. n. s.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Conceal me night,
And put thee in the darkest nook of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold, hold! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off. Milton.

Whereon for light he receives light, and a tree whose comfort, and delight to be objected, we can hear in the dark unmoved, and by consequence

Hooker.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Some obscure person, one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

The wisest lovers perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as under-ground colliers, as before. Locke.

To Dark. v. a. [from the noun] To darken; to obscure. Obsolete.

Lest with a cloud of pride, which oft doth dark
Her judgment, it should mix. Spenser.

Her glorious sight, which makes the doves envy
Shine. Spenser.

To Da'rken. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; difficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakspeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light we can have, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness. Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

Da'rksome. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

Her, or every day see [illegible] darning as stockings, which he performed to [illegible] Swift.

Da'rnel. n. s. [lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met even now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste? Shakspeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return,
But oats and darnel choak the ruling corn Dryden.

To Da'rrain. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the overhand. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shak.

2. To apply to the light; of single combatants.
Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Spenser.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]
1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.
Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, as with an arrow or lance. Peacham.
O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,
The weapons round his hollow temples ring. Dryden.
2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To throw offensively.
He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar. Dryd.
2. To throw; to emit: as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.
Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;
Or who ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

To DART. v. n.
1. To fly as a dart.
2. To let fly with hostile intention.
Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shak.

To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]
1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.
If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.
A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man. Tillotson.
2. To break by collision.
They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces Shakspeare.
David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overshad'wing all the earth;
Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milton.
3. To throw water in flashes.
Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.
Nodding his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and crest that dash the morning dew. Tickel.
4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.
This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, abodes
The sudden breach on't. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.
At once the lashing oars and brazen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depth below. Dryden.
6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.
Wisdom, bred to dash and skew,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hudib.
I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances, as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.
Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Spectator.
7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.
Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,
A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.
8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.
To dash over this with a line, will subject the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.
His tongue
Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest councils. Milton.
Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual, humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton.
An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy.
Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.
To dash this cavil, read but the practice of christian emperors. South.
After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.
Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.
The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.
Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

To DASH. v. n.
1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.
If the vessel be suddenly stopt in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.
2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.
On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall. Thomson.
3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.
Dorg, tho' without knowing how or why,
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Thro' sense and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.

DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Collision.
By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson.

—My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakſpeare.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all ear jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude axe with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milt.

Some presences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntleſs spirit of resolution. Shakſpeare.

Dauntleſs he rose, and to the fight returned
With shame his gloomy cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virg.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntleſs breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntleſs conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. ſ. [from dauntleſs.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. ſ. [mendula. It is supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dazel; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] A bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck at. Shakſpeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to night Daniel.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow-clowns. Hall.

DAWK. n. ſ. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, dawk the edge into the stuff, and so deface it. Moxon.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance toward day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakſpeare.

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I sleep, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomſon.

DAY. n. ſ. [dæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Dryden.

Or object new
Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shak.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
When offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day.
Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gotheline his heir,

DE'ADNETTLE. n. s. A weed; the same with archangel.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. s. [a sea term.] That estimation or conjecture which the seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee-way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [doof, Dutch.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf.
Shakspeare.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
Shakspeare.

The chief design here intended is to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Holder.

If any sins assault my life,
With that prime ill, a talking wife,
Till death shall bring the kind relief,
We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,
While I can better hear than see:
Oh ne'er may fortune thew her spite,
To make me deaf, and mend my sight. Swift.

2. It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses.
Shakspeare.

Oh that men's ears should be
To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! Shakspeare.

What virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain
Fly from her kind embracing arms,
Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms. Roscommon.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the plains;
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain. Dryd.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
Gives to the toil of death his glorious name. Pope.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:
No mortal courage can support the fright. Dryden.

4. Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd and chiding like the hollow roar
Of tides receding from the' insulted shore. Dryd.

The sea were seiz'd with sullen discontent,
And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went
Dryden.

To DEAF. } To DE'AFEN. } v. a. [from deaf.] To deprive of the power of hearing.

Hearing hath deaf'd our sailors, and if they Know how to hear, there's none know what to say. Donne

A swarm of their aerial shapes appears,
And, flutt'ring round his temples, deafs his ears
Dryden.

But Salius enters; and, exclaiming loud
For justice, deafens and disturbs the crowd. Dryd.

From shouting men, and horns, and dogs, he flies,
Deafen'd and stunn'd with their promiscuous cries
Addison.

DE'AFLY. adv. [from deaf.]

1. Without sense of sounds.

2. Obscurely to the ear.

DE'AFNESS. n. s. [from deaf.]

1. Want of the power of hearing; want of sense of sounds.

The Dunciad had never been writ, but at his request, and for his deafness; for, had he been able to converse with me, do you think I had amused my time so ill? Pope.

2. Unwillingness to hear.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place. King Charles.

DEAL. n. s. [deel, Dutch.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hooker.

1. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning: as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest, a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hooker.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;
But sorrow flouted at is double death. Shakesp.

What a deal of cold business doth a man misspend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. Ben Jonson.

He charge some deal thee haply honour may
That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd. Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason, a great deal, to doubt of it. South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause. Addison.

[from the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art?
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.

[deyl, Dutch.] Fir-wood, or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye placed in a room, and the clearer daylight, was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lively red. Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [delen, Dutch.]

To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isaiah.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

He shifted arms around his head he throws,
And deals in wrathful air his empty blows. Dryd.

The business of mankind, in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly. Addison.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,
And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold. Tickell.

Had the great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick. Addison.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk. Watts.

To scatter; to throw about.

Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When rolling through the skies the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

To give gradually, or one after another.

The ragged mallet deals resounding blows. Gay.

To distribute the cards.

DEAL. v. n.

To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

He is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third. Bacon.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,
They tell the secret which he first reveals. Prior.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakspeare.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill. This seems a vitious use.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suitors are so galled with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon.

The scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves. Atterbury.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more difficulties than those who deal in political matters. Addison.

True logick is not that nicety that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had reduced it. Watts' Logick.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide
His people? Who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers, than with him they deal? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal cleanly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she treat me, I should know what portion to deal with. Sidney.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Haywood.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see
You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:
Have no God to deal with. Dryden.

To DEALBATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.] To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION. n. s. [dealbatio, Latin.] The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white which were not so before: a word in little use.

All hair is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation. Brown.

DE'ALER. n. s. [from deal.]

1. One that has to do with any thing.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure. Swift.

2. A trader or trafficker.

Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DE'ALING. n. s. [from deal.]

1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker.

What these are!
Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect
The thoughts of others. Shakspeare.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence. Addison.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety Hammond.

DEAMBULATION. n. s. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEA'MBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. s. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French. From the Greek word δέκα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe.] The second dignitary of a diocese.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbies translated from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) in these are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to it regularly much like bishops, the king first sending a congé d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then choosing, the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without other election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Rocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church, they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

DE'ANERY. n. s. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.
He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal. Clarendon.

DE'ARNLY. adv. [beopnlic, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unſeen. Obſolete.
At laſt, as chance'd them by a foreſt ſide
To paſs, for ſuccour from the ſcorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearnly cried
With piercing ſhrieks. Spenſer.

DEARTH. n. ſ. [from dear.]
1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth, it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furniſh us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.
There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is ſtrewed with beggars, but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift
2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food ſo long a time. Shakſp.

Anſwer me this, ere yet my heart does break. Granville.

And thus the ſweet deluders tune their ſong. Pope.

To DELVE. v. a. [delfan, Sax. delven, Dutch; perhaps from δολος, a hog. Junius.]

1. To dig; to open the ground with a ſpade.

It ſhall go hard
But I will delve one yard below the mines,
And blow them at the moon. Shakſpeare.

Delve of convenient depth your thraſhing floor;
With temper'd clay then fill and face the ſame. Dryden.

The filthy ſwine, with delving ſnout
The rooted foreſt undermine. Phillips.

2. To fathom; to ſift; to ſound one's opinion. Figuratively.

What 's his name and birth?
—I cannot delve him to the root: his father
Was call'd Sicinius. Shakſpeare.

DELVE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pitfal; a den; a cave.

He ly and by
His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that ſhady delve him brought at laſt,
Where Mammon eſt did ſun his treaſury. Spenſer.

Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by leadmen, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-ſtones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their barns bread, wives, and ſelves. Ben Jonſon.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Diſt.

The apoſtle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was ſubject to periſh by a deluge, as this is ſubject to periſh by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they ſtrive to force
His channel to a new or narrow courſe,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
But ſwoln to a torrent, then a deluge, ſwells. Denham.

3. Any ſudden and reſiſtleſs calamity.

To DE'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The reſtleſs flood the land would overflow,
By which the deluged earth would uſeleſs grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves ruſh in
Implacable, till ſwell'd by the foam,
The ſhip ſinks, foundering in the vaſt abyſs. Phillips.

2. To overwhelm; to cauſe to ſink under the weight of any calamity.

1. Modeſty; ſoberneſs; gravity of aſpect.

Her eyes having in them ſuch a cheerfulneſs, as nature ſeemed to ſmile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureneſs, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor ſoul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modeſty; pretended gravity.

DEMU'RRAGE. n. ſ. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to maſters of ſhips, for their ſtay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMU'RRER. n. ſ. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pauſe upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controverſy conſiſts either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the caſe plain to the judge, or ſo hard and rare, as it breedeth juſt doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is aſſured of the law; and in ſuch caſe the judge with his aſſociates proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his aſſociates, then is their ſtay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or elſe for all the juſtices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the ſerjeants can ſay of both parts, to adviſe, and ſet down as law, whatſoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. ſ. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a ſmall obliquity, under ground; diſtinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They are diſperſed, ſome in the air, ſome on the earth, ſome in the waters, ſome amongſt the minerals, dens, and caves, under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beaſt.

What, ſhall they ſeek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? Shakſpeare.

The tyrant's den, whoſe uſe, though loſt to fame,
Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;
The cavern, only to her father known,
By him was to his darling daughter ſhown. Dryden.

'Tis then the ſhapeleſs beaſt his den forſakes;
In woods and fields a wild deſtruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may ſignify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibſon's Camden.

DENA'Y. n. ſ. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refuſal.

To her in haſte, give her this jewel: ſay,

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confeſſion.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not at hand; no man more ready to confeſs, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refuſal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or conceſſion.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
I muſt and will have Catherine to my wife. Shakſpeare.

The denial of hearing, and haſty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

He, at every freſh attempt, is repell'd
With ſaint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all thoſe acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: thoſe are the proper ſcenes, in which we act our confeſſions or denials of him. South.

DENI'ER. n. ſ. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a propoſition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at moſt, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A diſowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was ſo fearful when Chriſt looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he ſhall look him into deſtruction? South.

3. A refuſer; one that refuſes.

It may be I am effected by my denier ſufficient of myſelf to diſcharge my duty to God as a perſon, though not to men as a prince. King Ch.

That the mere Iriſh were reputed aliens, appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchaſed by them. Davis.

DE'NIZEN. } n. ſ. [from dynaſddyn, a
DE'NISON. } man of the city; or diarſyddol, free of the city, Welſh.] A freeman; one enfranchiſed.

Denizen is a Britiſh law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of bleſt abodes,
From whence theſe murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nurſing, be made to produce their ſeed out of their native ſoil; but corn, ſo neceſſary for all people, is fitted to grow and to ſeed as a free denizen of the world. Grew.

He ſummons ſtraight his denizens of air:
The lucid ſquadrons round the ſails repair. Pope.

To DE'NIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchiſe; to make free.

Pride, luſt, covetize, being ſeveral
To theſe three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their iſſue is inceſtuous:
Falſehood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

DENO'MINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.] That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation ariſeth of a ſanguineous affluxion, or elſe is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown.

To DENO'MINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpoſe of conſecration being not in every one underſtood, they have been conſtrued as though they had ſuperſtitiouſly meant either that thoſe places, which were denominated of angels and ſaints, ſhould ſerve for the worſhip of ſo glorious creatures; or elſe thoſe glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of ſuch places. Hooker.

Deteſtation is deſtructive to all that is eſtabliſhed among men, to all that is moſt precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, underſtanding and will: for what uſe can we have of our underſtandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And, if we act not voluntarily, what exerciſe have we for our wills? Hammond.

DENOMINATION. n. ſ. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryd.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripatetick, Epicureans, and the like. Seeth.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DEW. n. ſ. [deaw, Saxon; dauw, Dutch.] The moiſture upon the ground.

Dews we frequently obſerve after tumultuous days in moſt boiſtrous months, are nothing but a vapour conſiſting of water; which day it was ſent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the ſun then being above the horizon, it kept it off the ſurface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmoſphere. It was not diſcernible the ſun being now gone off, the vapour deſcends at and near the earth, and ſaturates the ſoil that is to thick as to be eaſily viſible thereupon: and when at length the heat there is ſomewhat further ſpent, which is uſually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cheriſhes, cools, and refreſhes. Woodward.

Never yet could I ſo ſtir my ſoul
Out of my ſelf, as to the entire rapture
Of thy dear preſence. Never yet could I
Diſſolve my ſenſes in a ſweeter ſleep,
Than when I ſunk my head down on thy boſom,
And the world ſtole away. Rowe.

Never yet ſo ſound in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of ſleep,
But with ſome timorous dreams was ſtill awak'd.
Shakſpeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us:
His dew falls every where. Shakſpeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roſes newly waſh'd with dew.
Shakſpeare.

Dews and rains are but the returns of moiſt vapours condenſed. Bacon.

Now ſliding ſtreams the thirſty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moiſten; to bedew.

A trickling ſtream of balm moſt ſovereign,
And dainty dear which on the ground ſtill fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. Fairy Q.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.
——Or ſo much as it needs
To dew the ſovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakſpeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mourniful tears.
Shakſpeare.

He ceas'd; diſcerning Adam with ſuch joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words which theſe he breath'd. Milton.

Polemon above the reſt appears
In ſable garments, dew'd with gathering tears.
Dryden.

In Gabek blood again
He dews his reeking ſword, and ſtrows the ground
With double ſwarms. Philips.

DE'WBERRY. n. ſ. [from dew and berry.] Dewberries, as they ſtand here among the more delicate fruits, muſt be underſtood to mean raſpberries, which are alſo of the bramble kind. Hortimer.

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakſpeare.

DEWE'SPRE'NT. part. [dew and eſprent.] Sprinkled with dew.

It never gave cry, ere them the crowing flocks
Had to th' tapſter to the tavourly herb
Of ſweet ſpeech dewesprent, and were in fold,
I ſat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy couched, and interwove
With flaunting honeyſuckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the ſparkling of dew.

Heroes, to whoſe renowned might,
Big-boaſted things of ſtrength are poor trade,
Upon a creſted ſhield to the eaſt clime,
That to the foul a ſtarling wounds it mounts.
Fairy Queen.

DE'WDROP. n. ſ. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which ſparkles at ſunrize.

I muſt go ſeek ſome dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowſlip's ear. Shakſpeare.

Innumerable as the dewdrops ſhine
On flakes of morning, when the ſun ſhall riſe
In ſpear's on every blade of graſs. Milton.

Reſt, ſweet as ſleep that ſhuts the eyes of day,
When the ſky opens to the dewdrop cauſe.
Pope.

DE'WLAP. n. ſ. [from lapping or *lick*ing the dew.]

1. The fleſh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about their ſhoulders ſpread,
And from his neck the dewlap hang Chapman.

2. It is uſed in Shakſpeare for a lip diſcoloured with age, in contempt.

And cream-cruſted lips like ſilting ale's bowl,
In every likeneſs that ſtirred crabs,
And when ſhe drinks, againſt her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
Shakſpeare.

DEWLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furniſhed with dewlaps

Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dew-lapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em.
With wens on their flesh? Shakspeare.
The ambitious heifer hall renew chaces along the plain,
While unconcerning love torments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

The rich-wrought diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound Spenſer.

A lift the cobblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in ſhew, is but a wreath of thorns,
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and ſleepleſs nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why ſhould he ravith from that diadem
Some few grey treſſes, which the hand of time
Muſt ſhortly plant on his? Dryden.

Faſhion, at once made dead to her prey,
And ſtript our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a miſt before the radiant day. Prior.

DI'ADEMED adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

One of our phyſicians proved diſappointed in his prognoſticks, or rather diagnoſticks. Harvey.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, ſo as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The mountroſity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with ſome diſadvantage; the ſhortneſs being fixed unto the legs of one ſide, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

All forts of ſtone conſiſted of grandles, which cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the ſide of the ſtrata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a ſquare into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the ſide and diagonal of a ſquare, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea alſo of the diviſion of that line into certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philoſophers according to common acceptation, as they reſpectively from one man unto another, or any conſtant ſite in each, as though that ſhould be the right in one, which, upon conſtant facing, ſtands, athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were diſtinguiſhed according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, the either ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'AGRAM. n. ſ. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical ſcheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a ſcheme or diagram in the mathematicks; very uſeful to the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not theſe perſons make a diagram of theſe cogitative lines and angles, and demonſtrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. ſ. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or ſome acid, or rhubarb powder. Harvey.

DI'AL. n. ſ. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or ſhadow ſhows the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is ſhort:
To ſpend that ſhortneſs baſely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour. Shakſpeare.

If the motion be very ſlow, we perceive it not; we have no ſenſe of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly ſhadow ſteals away upon the dial, and the quickeſt eye can diſcover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. ſ. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them poſſeſſed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inſcribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the ſame manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the common dial-plate. Addiſon's Spectator.

DI'AMOND. n. ſ. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.] The diamond, the moſt valuable and hardeſt of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and perfect as the pureſt water; and is eaſily diſtinguiſhed from all other ſubſtances by its vivid ſplendour, and the brightneſs of its reflexions. It is extremely various in ſhape and ſize, being found in the greateſt quantity very ſmall, and the larger ones extremely ſeldom met with. The largeſt ever known is that in the poſſeſſion of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and ſeventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth ſeven hundred and ſeventy-nine thouſand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the fuſe of the ſtrongeſt fires, except the concentrated ſolar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fierceſt of all fires does it no injury, unleſs directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glaſs-houſe fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and ſuffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before, but if taken haſtily out, it will ſometimes crack, and even ſplit into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the Eaſt Indies and the Braſil; and though they are uſually found clear and colourleſs, yet they are ſometimes ſlightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of ſome metalline particles. Hill's Hiſt. of Foſſils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promiſ'd. Shakſpeare.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond:
Thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shakſpeare.

The diamond is preferable and vaſtly ſuperior to all others in luſtre and beauty, as alſo in hardneſs, which renders it more durable and laſting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other ſtone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
For as the ſtar that others in the morn. Waller.

The lively diamond drinks thy purer rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomſon.

DI'APASE. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.] A chord including all tones. The old word for Diapaſon. See DIAPASON.

A ſilver ſtring mellow'd with gold, at which the baſe
Part of the ſpheres by touch and muſe;
So is the diapaſe of the two ſpheres,
All which compacted make a good diapaſe. Spenſer.

The muſe, that oft in ſacred meaſures,
With wanton wings the wanton words to tie,
And make a curious diapaſe of pleaſures,
Now her glad tunes not daintily. Spenſer.

DIAPA'SON. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.] A Diapaſon denotes a chord which includes all the tones: it is the ſame with that we call an eighth, or an octave; becauſe there are but ſeven notes or tones, and then the eighth is the ſame again with the firſt.

It diſcovereth the true coincidence of ſounds into diapaſons, which is the return of the ſame ſound. Bacon.

Hath din
Broke the fair muſick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whoſe love their motion ſway'd
In perfect diapaſon, whilſt they ſtood
In firſt obedience, and their ſtate of good. Milton.

Many a ſweet riſe, many as ſweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapaſon ſwallows all. Craſhaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This univerſal frame began;
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compaſs of the notes it ran,
The diapaſon cloſing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. ſ. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the fineſt ſpecies of figured linen after damaſk.

Not any damſel, which her vaunteth moſt
In ſkilful knitting of ſilk thriften twine;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boaſt
In diaper, in damaſk, or in lyne,
Might in their cloſe ſo cunning ever daie
With this ſo curious net-work to compare. Spenſer.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a ſilver baſon
Full of roſe-water, and be ſtrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shak.

To DI'APER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diverſify; to flower.

For fear the ſtones her tender foot ſhould wrong,
The ground be ſtrew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the diſcolour'd mead. Spenſer.

Flora uſed to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howel.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reaſon tells you, that your fold muſt cover ſomewhat unſeen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANE'ITY. n. ſ. [from διαφανὴς.] Tranſparency; pellucidneſs; power of tranſmitting light.

Becauſe the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to tranſmit the light, which, if the eyes ſhould alſo ſtand open, would be apt to grow dry and thirſty, and ſo loſe their diaphaneity; therefore are the eye-lids ſo contrived as often to wink, that ſo they may, as it were, glaze and varniſh them over with the moiſture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHA'NICK. adj. [διὰ and φαίνω.] Tranſparent; pellucid; having the power to tranſmit light.

Air is an element ſuperior, and lighter than water, through whoſe vaſt, open, ſubtle, diaphanick maſs, or tranſparent body, the ſun, aforeſaid, ſhined, cauſe tranſpires. Raleigh.

DIA'PHANOUS. adj. [διὰ and φαίνω.] Tranſparent; clear; tranſlucent; pellucid; capable to tranſmit light.

Artificial called ſight a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When we had taken off two feet, we found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to thoſe which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORE'TICK. adj. [διαφορητικὸς.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoreſis or perſpiration; cauſing ſweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a ſudorifick, is ſome thing that will provoke to eaſing. Watts.

*Diaphoretick*s, or promoters of perſpiration, help the organs of digeſtion, becauſe the concoction of the aliment makes it perſpirable. Arbuthnot.

DI'APHRAGM. n. ſ. [διάφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Dress his sickness; for it is my office. Shakſp.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
To [illegible] by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakſpeare.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To DI'ET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet
Spare fasts that oft with gods [illegible] Milton.

DI'ET-DRINK. n. ſ. [diet and drink.] Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The [illegible] will do much better than the lady's diet-drink, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DI'ET. n. ſ. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word ſignifying a multitude, Junius.] An aſſembly of princes or eſtates.

An emperour in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or aſſembly of the eſtates of many free princes, eccleſiaſtical and temporal. Ralegh.

DI'ETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. Dict.

DI'ETER. n. ſ. [from diet.] One who preſcribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He taught our Heath as Juno had been ſick,
And he her dieter. Shakſpeare's Cymbeline.

DIETE'TICAL. } adj. [διαιτητικὸς.] Re-
DIETE'TICK. } lating to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the uſe of food.

He received no other counſel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and ſuch as culinary preſcription might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

This book of Cheyne's became the ſubject of converſation, and produced even ſects in the dietetick philoſophy. Arbuth. on Aliments.

To DIFFER. v. n. [differo, Latin.]

1. To be diſtinguiſhed from; to have properties and qualities not the ſame with thoſe of another perſon or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inſide, it will make a differing ſound from the ſame pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't diſcern
What virtues grow from ignorance and chance,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute.
Addiſon's Cato.

The ſeveral parts of the ſame animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment ſhall ſometimes hear indifferent things differ, and know well within himſelf that thoſe which ſo differ mean one thing, and yet they themſelves never agree. Bacon.

Here ancient bards your judgment may admire;
We never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely ſpeculative, as theſe are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and ſentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain meaſures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate thoſe who differ with you in their ſentiments. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of theſe ſpeculations. Cheyne.

DI'FFERENCE. n. ſ. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being diſtinct from ſomething; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between cuſtoms of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the ſucceſſion of blood, but to the ſucceſſion of virtue. Ralegh.

Thus from one ſtock, from virtue firſt begun
The different branches did adorn mankind:
He claim'd no title from deſcent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be uſeful to diſcern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to conſider every difference that is in things, and divide them into diſtinct claſſes under every ſuch difference. Locke.

3. The diſproportion between one thing and another, cauſed by the qualities of each.

You ſhall ſee great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakſpeare's Winter's Tale.

On the ſtrange difference of man and man!
To take a woman's ſervices are due;
My fool uſurps my body. Shakſp. King Lear.

Here might be ſeen a great difference between men practiſed to fight, and men accuſtomed only to ſport. Hayward.

4. Diſpute; debate; quarrel; controverſy.

What was the difference?——It was a contention in publick. Shakſpeare's Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there ſhould be ſuch differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotſon.

5. Diſtinction.

Our conſtitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between ſuch as are more or leſs criminal. Addiſon's Freeholder.

6. Point in queſtion; ground of controverſy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this preſent queſtion in the court?
Shakſpeare.

7. A logical diſtinction.

Some are never without a difference; and commonly, by amuſing men with a ſubtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of diſtinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of ſovereign, yet did not put thoſe things in execution, which are the true marks and differences of ſovereignty. Davies.

9. Diſtinct kind.

This is notoriouſly known in ſome differences of ſnake or eel. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To DI'FFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cauſe a difference; to make one thing not the ſame as another.

Moſt are apt to ſeek all the differences of letters in thoſe articulating motions; whereas ſeveral combinations of letters are framed by the very ſame motions of thoſe organs which are commonly obſerved, and are differenced by other concurrent cauſes. Holder.

Graſs differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and deſolate wilderneſs. Ray.

We ſee nothing that differences the courage of Meneſtheus from that of Sergeſthus. Pope.

DI'FFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Diſtinct; not the ſame.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addiſon.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccuſtom'd air,
And other climes, where diff'rent food and foul
Portend diſtempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; diſſimilar.

Neither the ſhape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; becauſe men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Happineſs conſiſts in things which produce pleaſure, and in the abſence of thoſe which cauſe any pain: now theſe, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERE'NTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitеſimals, or infinitely ſmall quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It conſiſts in deſcending from whole quantities to their infinitely ſmall differences, and comparing together theſe infinitely ſmall differences, of what kind ſoever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analyſis of infinitеſimals. Harris.

DI'FFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may conſider how differently he is affected by the ſame thought, which preſents itſelf in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius Addiſon.

DI'FFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a ſmooth face may remit the light ſo differingly, as to vary a colour. Pyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not eaſy; not obvious. Little uſed.

That that ſhould give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itſelf hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehenſion as any myſtery in nature. Glanville's Scepſis.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whiſtle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be perſuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil to granting the diſpenſation, doth uſe it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of thoſe duties which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFI'CILNESS. n. ſ. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be perſuaded; incompliance; impracticability. A word not in uſe, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter ſort of malignity turneth but to a croſſneſs, or forwardneſs, or aptneſs to oppoſe, or difficilneſs, or the like; but the deeper ſort, to envy and miſchief. Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not eaſy; not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of the people. Lachaise.

2. Troubleſome; vexatious.

3. Hard to pleaſe; peeviſh; moroſe.

DI'FFICULTLY. adv. [from difficult.] Hardly, with difficulty; not eaſily.

A man, who has always indulged himſelf in the full enjoyment of his ſtation, will difficultly be perſuaded to think any methods unjuſt that he perſuaded to continue it. Rogers' Sermons.

DI'FFICULTY. n. ſ. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardneſs; contrariety to eaſineſs or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourſelves to obſerve, is a work of labour and difficulty; a ſervice that requires our greateſt care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accompliſh; that which is not eaſy.

They miſtake difficulties for impoſſibilities: a pernicious miſtake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are ſeldom convinced of it, and their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Diſtreſs; oppoſition.

Thus, by degrees, he roſe to Jove's imperial ſeat. Thus difficulties prove a ſoul legitimately great. Dryden.

Perplexity in affairs; uneaſineſs of circumſtances.

They lie under ſome difficulties by reaſon of the emperor's diſpleaſure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addiſon on Italy.

4. Objection; cavil.

Men ſhould conſider, that raiſing difficulties concerning the myſteries in religion, cannot make them more wiſe, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFI'DE. v. n. [diffido, Latin.] To diſtruſt; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new ſolution hear;
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DI'FFIDENCE. n. ſ. [from diffide.]

1. Diſtruſt; want of confidence in others.

No man almoſt thought himſelf ſecure, and men durſt ſcarce commune or talk one with another: but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought ſcandal
To Iſrael, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propenſe enough before
To waver. Milton's Agoniſtes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourſelves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is a true ſenſe, be only on probable proofs, our aſſent can reach no higher than an aſſurance or confidence ariſing from the more or leſs apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be ſilent always when you doubt your ſenſe;
And ſpeak, though ſure, with ſeeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatſoever atheiſts think on, or whatſoever they look on, all do adminiſter ſome reaſons for ſuſpicion and diffidence, leſt poſſibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DI'FFIDENT adj. [from diffide.]

1. Diſtruſtful; doubting others.

Be not diffident
Of wiſdom; ſhe deſerts thee not, if thou
Diſmiſs not her, when moſt thou need'ſt her nigh. Milton.

Pliny ſpeaks of the Seres, the ſame people with the Chineſe, as being very ſhy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, uſed of things; uncertain.

I was really ſo diffident of it, as to let it lie by me theſe two years, juſt as you now ſee it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himſelf; not confident.

I am not ſo confident of my own ſufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counſels of others; but yet I am not ſo diffident of myſelf, as implicitly to ſubmit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Diſtreſs makes the humble heart diffident. Sandys.

To DIFFI'ND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to ſplit. Dict.

DIFFI'SSION. n. ſ. [diffiſſio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or ſplitting. Dict.

DIFFLA'TION. n. ſ. [diffiare, Lat.] The act of ſcattering with a blaſt of wind. Dict.

DI'FFLUENCE. } n. ſ. [from diffluo, Lat.]
DI'FFLUENCY. } The quality of falling away on all ſides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to conſiſtency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a conſiſtence or determination of its diffluency; and amitteth not its eſſence, but condition of fluidity Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'FFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not conſiſtent; not fixed.

DI'FFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different ſtructure; diſſimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refraction of diform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; ſuch as are veins, an uneven poliſh, or the ſinuous poſition of the pores of glaſs Newton.

DIFFO'RMITY. n. ſ. [from difform.] Diverſity of form; irregularity; diſſimilitude.

While they murmur againſt the preſent meaſure of things, they deſire in it an alteration from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things be'. Boyle.

When thoſe waters began to ſwell back, long before they could twell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuſe themſelves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To ſpread; to ſcatter; to diſperſe.

Wiſdom had ordain'd
God out of evil to create; inſtead
Of ſpirits malign, a better race to bring
Into their vacant room, and thence diffuſe
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No ſect wants its apoſtles to propagate and diffuſe it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whoſe race ſhall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuſe its fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffuſ'd a venerable grace,
And majeſty itſelf was in his face. Dryden.

DIFFU'SE. adj. [diffuſus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely ſpread.

2. Copious; not conciſe.

DIFFU'SED participial adj. [from diffuſe.] This word ſeems to have ſignified, in Shakſpeare's time, the ſame as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Like ſome diffuſed ſong: we ſtuck ruſh ſtaves,
With ſome diffuſed ſong. Shakſpeare.

He grins like an ape,
To ſweeten a deformity, diffuſed in ſmiles,
And every thing about him unnatural. Ibid.

DIFFU'SEDLY adv. from diffuſed. Widely; diſperſedly; in manner of that which is ſpread every way.

DIFFU'SEDNESS. n. ſ. from diffuſed. The ſtate of being diffuſed; diſperſion.

DIFFU'SELY. adv. [from diffuſe.]

2. Copiouſly; not conciſely.

DIFFU'SION. n. ſ. [from diffuſe.]

1. Diſperſion; the ſtate of being ſcattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impreſſions and ſignatures of their motions, the diffuſion of ſpecies viſible ſeemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the ſpecies audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A ſheet of very well ſtained marbled paper did not caſt diffuſed colours upon the wall, nor threw its light with an equal diffuſion; but threw its beams, unſtained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiouſneſs; exuberance of ſtyle.

DIFFU'SIVE. adj. [from diffuſe.]

1. Having the quality of ſcattering any thing every way.

Diffuſive of themſelves, where'er they paſs
They make that warmth in others they expreſs:
Their valour works like bodies on a glaſs,
And does its image on their men project. Dryd.

2. Scattered; diſperſed; having the quality of ſuffering diffuſion.

All liquid bodies are diffuſive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet.

No man is of ſo venereal and diffuſive a luſt, as to proſtitute himſelf to all comers. Stuck.

The ſtalk too long o'erload with weight,
Expects the ſeeds to ripen each to maſs,
And when the diffuſive body's waſte,
And with their fruit adorn their heavy head. Dryden.

Cheriſh'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows,
Its diffuſive branches ſpreading bloom diſcloſe,
And round the happy ſeat diffuſive odour flows. Pope.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themſelves where the ſeat of it is fixed: whether in the pope alone, or the council alone, or in both together, or in the diffuſive body of chriſtians Tillotſon.

DIFFU'SIVELY. adv. [from diffuſive.] Widely; extenſively; every way.

DIFFU'SIVENESS n. ſ. [from diffuſive.]

1. Extenſion; diſperſion; the power of diffuſing; the ſtate of being diffuſed.

2. Want of conciſeneſs; large compaſs of expreſſion.

I believe that I could match a modern legend, in as few words as any hiſtorian the whole ſtock of diffuſiveness with which the moderns abound. Addiſon.

To DIG. v. a. pret. dig, or digged; part. paſſ. dig, or digged. [Erſe, Saxon, a ditch; tiger, Daniſh, to dig.]

Iſaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father. Genesis.

2. To form by digging.

Nehemiah commanded them to build up the walls of Jeruſalem, which were broken down, and to ſet up the gates that were burnt with fire; and they digged a trench, to overflow the place. Eſdras.

He ſtopp'd the ſprings, and digg'd a new
Through which the waters flow. Cowley.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a ſpade.

Some of your gardens, without their ſure
Will ſcarce afford a ſallet to your table;
So you muſt all of dig up your garden too after. Temple.

Bid him dig the ground, be firſt to turn
The clod. Dryden's Virg.

4. To pierce with a ſharp point.

A ſtork ſurveys the ſcaly fiſh
Her crooked beak and cruſtaceous dried;

So for the growing liver digg'd his breaſt,
The growing liver fill'd supplied the feaſt. Dryd.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the higheſt mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the Tyrrhene Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her wonted income to the crooked ſhare;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her ſtore,
Digg'd from her entrails hell the precious ore.
Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a ſpade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not, and dig for it more than for hid treaſures Job.

The Italians have often dug into lands, deſcribed in old authors as the places where ſtatues or obelisks ſtood, and ſeldom failed of ſucceſs.
Addiſon's Italy.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I dug up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not thee more incenſe. Shakſpeare.

DI'GAMY. n. ſ. [Digamia.] Second marriage; marriage to a ſecond wife after the death of the firſt: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr Champny only proves, that archbiſhop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that ſuch bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a biſhop of the lawful uſe of his power of ordaining.
Biſhop Ferrar.

DI'GERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That has the power of digeſting, or cauſing digeſtion. Dict.

DI'GEST. n. ſ. [digeſta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpoſe to make a paſſage [...] recompt ſentence of the laws of mine own nation.
Bacon.

1. To diſtribute into various claſſes or repoſitories; to range or diſpoſe methodically.

2. To concoct in the ſtomach, ſo as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper uſe.

Is little faults, proceeding on diſtemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how ſhall we ſtretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, ſwallow'd, and digeſted,
Appear? Shakſpeare's Henry V.

Each then has organs to digeſt his food,
One to be ſure, and one to ſerve the brood. Prior.

3. To ſoften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chymical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper uſe.

Chuſen friends, with ſenſe refin'd,
Learning digeſted well Thompſon.

5. To reduce to any plan, ſcheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firſtlings of thoſe broils,
'Ginning in the middle; ſtarting thence away
To what may be digeſted in a play. Shakſpeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

Firſt, I'll go to dinner.
—Nay, let me prai[...] you while I have a ſtomach.
—No, pray thee, [...] ſerve for tableware,

Then, howſoe'er thou ſpeak'ſt, 'mongſt other things
I ſhall digeſt it. Shakſpeare's Merc. of Ven.

The pleaſance of numbers is, that rudeneſs and barbariſm might the better taſte and digeſt the leſſons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digeſt the third.
Shakſpeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To diſpoſe a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGE'ST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGE'STER. n. ſ. [from digeſt.]

1. He that digeſts or diſpoſes.

2. He that digeſts or concocts his food.

People that are bluſhy and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digeſters. Arbuth.

3. A ſtrong veſſel or engine, contrived by M Papin, wherein to boil, with a very ſtrong heat, any bony ſubſtances ſo as to reduce them into a fluid ſtate.
Quincy.

4. That which cauſes or ſtrengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent uſe for all diſeaſes of the ſtomach, a great reſtorer of health, and a great digeſter. Temp.

DIGE'STIBLE. adj. [from digeſt.] Capable of being digeſted or concocted.

Thoſe medicines that purge by ſtool, at the firſt, not digeſtible by the ſtomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

DIGE'STION. n. ſ. [from digeſt.]

1. The act of digeſting or concocting food in the ſtomach.

Now good digeſtion wait on appetite,
And health on both Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

Digeſtion is a fermentation begun, becauſe there are all the requiſites of ſuch a fermentation, heat, air, and moiſture: it is not a complete fermentation, becauſe that requires a greater degree than the concoction of the aliment in the ſtomach: vegetable putrefaction reſembles very much animal digeſtion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by meaſures and weights, or any preciſe rules; but in all ſtates with the regard of the ſtrength of age or of health, and the uſe or diſuſe of exerciſe, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find in himſelf of the preſent ſtrength or weakneſs of digeſtion.
Temple.

Every morſel to a ſatisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digeſtion.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digeſtion, or maturation of ſome metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Diſtil by a cheriſh the furnaces prepare,
Raiſe all the labo[...]houſes of the air,
And by crude vapours in digeſtion there?
Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodiſing; the maturation of a deſign

The digeſtion of the counſels in Sweden is made in ſenate, conſiſting of forty counſellors, who are generally the moſt conſiderable men. Temple.

4. The act of diſpoſing a wound to generate matter.

5. The diſpoſition of a wound or ſore to generate matter.

The firſt ſtage of healing, or the diſcharge of matter, is by ſurgeons called digeſtion. Sharp.

DIGE'STIVE. adj. [from digeſt.]

1. Having the power to cauſe digeſtion, or to ſtrengthen the ſtomach.

A chilifactory menſtruum, or a digeſtive preparation, drawn from ſpecies or individuals whoſe ſtomach peculiarly diſſolves lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Capable by heat to ſoften and ſubdue.

The earth and ſun were in that very ſtate: the one active, piercing, and digeſtive, by its heat; the other paſſive, receptive, and ſtored with materials for ſuch a production. Hale.

3. Methodiſing; adjuſting.

To buſineſs ripen'd by digeſtive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dyer.

DIGE'STIVE. n. ſ. [from digeſt.] An application which diſpoſes a wound to generate matter.

Let off dit with digeſtives. Wiſeman.

DIGE'STURE. n. ſ. Concoction. Not uſed.

Neither let yourſelf always taſte meats [...] digeſture; then is veal, ſweetbreads. Bacon.

DI'GGER. n. ſ. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a ſpade.

When we ſifted nature, we have been [...] by diggers, that even when the ſky ſeemed [...] there would ſuddenly ariſe a ſteam to thick, [...] it would put out their candles. Bacon.

To DIGHT. v. a. [dihtan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dreſs; to deck; to bedeck; to embelliſh; to adorn. It ſeems always to ſignify the paſt: the participle paſſive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the ſtudious cloiſters pale;
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, maſſy proof;
And ſtoned windows rich'ly dight,
Caſting a dim religious light. Milton.

Juſt ſo the proud inſulting laſs
Array'd and dighted Hubibras Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he [...]
Which maketh him invulnerable to [...] Hudibras.

DI'GIT. n. ſ. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The meaſure of length containing the ſourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but two five digits high, or ſomewhat more, the quickſilver will not fall, but remain ſuſpended in the tube, becauſe it cannot preſs the ſubjacent mercury with ſo great a force as doth the whole cylinder of the air, reaching from the [...] of the atmoſphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the ſun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expreſſed by ſingle figures; any number to ten: ſo called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers ſeven and nine, from [...] conſiderations abſtruſe, have been eſteemed by [...], but all or moſt of other digits have been [...] univerſally applauded. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'GITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into diviſions like fingers: as a digitated leaf is a leaf compoſed of many ſmall leaves.

In animals a manifold uſe, or ſuch as are digitated, or have ſeveral diviſions on their feet, [...] are but two that are unguinous: that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIGLADIA'TION. n. ſ. [digladiatio, Lat.] A combat with ſwords; any quarrel or conteſt.

Ariſtotle ſeems purpoſely to intend the cheriſhing of controverſial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obſcurity. Glanville.

DI'GNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Inveſted with ſome dignity: it is uſed chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are ſtiled dignified clerks, as having ſome dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient deſcent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that perſon. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Uſed chiefly of the clergy.

To honour; to adorn; to give luſtre to; to improve by ſome adventitious excellence, or honourable diſtinction.

Such a day,
So fought, ſo follow'd, and ſo fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæſar's fortunes! Shakſpeare's Henry IV.
Not that we think us worthy ſuch a gueſt,
But that your worth will dignify our feaſt.
Ben Jonſon.
No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DI'GNITARY. n. ſ. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to ſome dignity, to ſome rank above that of a parochial prieſt.

It may be any dignitaries, whoſe preferments are perhaps not liable to the accuſation of ſuperfluity, they may be perſons of ſuperior merit Swift.

DI'GNITY. n. ſ. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where ſpoken ſo highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and are not in his equal dignity. Hakewill.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aſpect

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure more regard by a look, than others can challenge by the moſt imperious commands Collier.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place

Either their ſpring-time ſhow'rs conceive them light and airy,
And not a thought that ſinks on any Stage
For thoſe of lead,
And ſtick to dignity heap'd up to them Swift.

4. [Among eccleſiaſticks.] By a dignity we underſtand that promotion or preferment to which any juriſdiction is annexed Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: as, axiomatical dignities.

The ſciences concluding from axioms, and principles known by themſelves, receive not ſo much confirmation from probable reaſons, much leſs from the aſſeverations Pearſon.

6. [In aſtrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any ſign.

DIGNO'TION. n. ſ. [from dignoſco, Lat.] Diſtinction; diſtinguiſhing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjectures of prevalent humours, may be collected from ſpots in our nails, we are not averſe to conclude Browne's Vulgar Errours.

To DIGRE'SS. v. n. [digreſſus, Latin.]

1. To turn aſide out of the road.

2. To depart from the main deſign of a diſcourſe, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the purſuit of an argument there is hardly room to digreſs into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the ſignification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It ſeemeth (to digreſs no farther) that the Tartarians, ſpreading ſo far, cannot be the Iſraelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to tranſgreſs; to deviate. Not in uſe.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in ſome part am forced to digreſs,
Which at more leiſure I will ſo excuſe
As you ſhall be well ſatisfied. Shakſpeare.
Thy noble ſhape is but a form of wax,
Digreſſing from the valour of a man. Shakſp.

DIGRE'SSION. n. ſ. [digreſſio, Latin.]

1. A paſſage deviating from the mean tenour or deſign of a diſcourſe.

The good man thought ſo much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digreſſions to him. Sidney.
He, ſhe knew, would intermix
Grateful digreſſions, and ſolve high diſpute
With conjugal careſſes. Milton.
Here ſome digreſſion I muſt make, t' accuſe
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muſe.
Denham.
To content and fill the eye of the underſtanding, the beſt authors ſprinkle their works with pleaſing digreſſions, with which they recreate the mind of their reader. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digreſſion of the ſun is not equal, but, near the equinoctial interſections, it is right and greater; near the ſolſtices more oblique and leſſer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. ſ. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judicial diſtinction.

DIKE. n. ſ. [Dic, Saxon; dyk, Erſe.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The ſtock-dove breeds within, and without a roaring ſound
The rising rivers float the nether ground Dryden.
The king of dykes! than whom no flood of mud
With deeper ſable blots the ſilver flood. Pope.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of ſo great a deluge, and all the art and induſtry of man is not ſufficient to raiſe up dikes and ramparts againſt it. Decay of Piety.

To DILACERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accompliſhed ſcene, ſtrug gling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks thoſe parts which reſtrained him before Brown.

DILACERA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilacerate, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greateſt ſenſation of pain is by the diſſection or dilaceration of ſmall nerves, and a diſſolution of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DILA'NIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expoſe her nakedly to be raviſhed, they met half way in a grateful mind. Howell's Engliſh Tears.

To DILA'PIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay

DILAPIDA'TION. n. ſ. [dilapidatio, Lat.] The incumbent's ſuffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his eccleſiaſtical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the ſame: and it likewiſe extends to his committing, or ſuffering to be committed, any wilful waſte in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all churchwardens to ſurvey the dilapidations of the chancel and manſion houſe belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe.

DILATABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extenſion.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extenſiveneſs of the gullets of ſerpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the ſtomach of an adder, whoſe neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a conſtant motion. Arbuthnot.

DILA'TABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extenſion.

The windpipe divides itſelf into a great number of branches, called bronchia: theſe end in ſmall air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admiſſion of air, and to ſubſide at the expulſion of it Arbuthnot.

DILATA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilatatio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending into greater ſpace: oppoſed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are ſo eaſy and ſo ſubtle, that you can hardly conceive or diſtinguiſh them at firſt. Holder.

2. The ſtate of being extended; the ſtate in which the parts are at more diſtance from each other.

Joy cauſeth a chearfulneſs and vigour in the eyes; ſinging, leaping, dancing, and ſometimes tears: all theſe are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the ſpirits into the outward parts Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The image of the ſun ſhould be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other caſual inequality of the refracting ſubſtance. Newton.

To DILA'TE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to ſpread out; to enlarge: oppoſed to contract.

But ye thereby more to greater glory gate,
Than had ye formed been of Jove's geere;
For now your might does more diſplayed bee,
And in my darkneſs greater doth appear.
Spenſer.
Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated ſtood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.
Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erſt; dilated ſpirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead; which for thee
Chiefly I ſought; without thee can deſpiſe. Milton.
Through all the air his ſounding ſtrings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late Waller.
Diſtill'd, it riſes in a higher ſphere;
Dilates its ſteams, and lighter ſcents emit. Prior.
I mark the various flow of the winds;
Theſe are their reaſons, theſe their orders bonds:
They now dilate, and now contract their force;
Various their ſpeed, but endleſs is their courſe. Prior.
The ſecond refraction would ſpread the rays one way as much as the firſt does another, and ſo not make the image in breadth more than the ſun does in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffuſely and copiouſly.

Let me not live,
After my flame lacks oil, to be the ſnuff
Of younger ſpirits, whoſe apprehenſive ſenſes
All but new things diſdain; whoſe judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whoſe conſtancies
Expire before their faſhions. Shakſpeare's Queen.
I ſhall not
To waſte your patience from what we purpoſe,
Extend my ſpeech with our moſt uſeful haſte:
You ſhall read that in my face, which I
Will leave my tongue to tell. Shakſpeare.

To DILA'TE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

2. To ſpeak largely and copiouſly.

It may be better for princes, in matters of grace, to reſtrict the ſame publickly, and by themſelves, or their miniſters to them, and not dilate and impawne their fame, by an indiſcreet facility of grace. Bacon.

DILA'TOR. n. s. [from dilate.] That which widens or extend.

The muscles, or blowers up of the cheeks and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in some people. Arbuthnot

DILA'TORINESS. n. s. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DI'LATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; laggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakspeare

Those cardinals trifle with me: I abhor This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shaksp.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man, To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Otway

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILE'CTION. n. s. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle.

DILE'MMA. n. s. [λημμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss; Whom good or ill does equally confound, And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case! To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma, either way I'm sped; If foes they write, if friends they read, me dread. Pope.

DI'LIGENCE. n. s. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; uninterrmitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Timothy.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter.

DI'LIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings. Proverbs.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition. Deuteronomy.

DI'LIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures. Dryden.

DILL. n. s. [dile, Saxon.] An herb, which hath a slender, fibrose, annual root; the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August. Mortimer.

DILU'CID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; not opaque.
2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILU'CIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DILUCIDA'TION. n. s. [from dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DI'LUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DI'LUENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water; every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbuthnot.

To DILU'TE. v. a. [dilue, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed. Locke

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbuth.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton

DILU'TE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch: and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater. Newton

DILU'TER. n. s. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILU'TION. n. s. [dilutio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilation or congelation or thickening, which is performed by dispersing the most liquid parts by heat, or by intimating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILU'VIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about. Burnet.

DIM. adj. [bimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dow, Erse.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form how can my spark discern, Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Ropers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view, Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wondrous fair did seem to be, That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As when the Almighty's lightning brand does light, It dims the dazed eyen, and daunts the senses quite. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted. Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head, With all such reading as was never read. Pope.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide, By conduct of some star, doth make her way, When as a storm hath dimm'd her trusty guide, Out of her course doth wander far astray. Spenser.

All of us have cause To wail the dimming of our shining star. Shakspeare.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimm'd his face, Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants. Dryden.

DIME'NSION. n. s. [dimensio, Latin.] Space contained in any thing; bulk extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He tried The tomb, and found the straight dim space wide. Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room. Swift.

DIME'NSIONLESS. adj. [from dimension.] Without any definite bulk.

In they pass'd Dimensionless through heav'nly doors. Milton.

DIME'NSIVE. adj. [dimensus, Lat.] That marks the boundaries or outlines.

All bodies have their measure, and their dimensive lines? Davies.

DIMICA'TION. n. s. [dimicatio, Lat.] battle; the act of fighting; contest. Dict.

A dreadful din was heard to ſhake
The hollow caverns of the deep. Milton.

O, 'twas a rare enchanter that was he
That made the noiſe: he ſhook the city,
Or ſome ſpirit raiſed from the deep
With din confuſed, to ſet the head on edge
Of one that ſhould deliver ſuch a tale. Shakſpeare.

Scatter his enemies, and make them fly;
And give their baſeleſs fancies the diſmay.
What din was heard
Shouts, groans, and ſudden clangors,
And every ſhape of horror. Milton.

Now all the heavenly
Long darkneſs, cries from every ſide
And ſeek for end of war. Milton.
How, with the ſeveral elements around,
Earth, water, air, the ſtunning din confound,
The ſtreams ſtun, like adverſe winds and tides,
While every ſhore is fenced at its ſides. Smith.

Some uſages, that ſeem, of no advance to one nation, or, by education, cuſtom, and the common conſent of their parts, to coupled in their minds, that they change not their ſtage. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

No more, dear mother: all in death it ſhows,
Your peace of mind by rage to diſcompoſe. Dryd.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who poſſeſs all the advantages of life, are in a ſtate where there are many accidents to diſorder and diſcompoſe, but few to pleaſe them. Swift.

5. To diſplace; to diſcard. Not in uſe.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely ſuſpicious, he never put down or diſcompoſed a counſellor or near ſervant. Bacon.

DISCOMPO'SURE. n. ſ. [from diſcompoſe.] Diſorder; perturbation.

He threw himſelf upon his bed, lamenting with much paſſion, and with abundance of tears and continued in this melancholick diſcompoſure of mind many days. Clarendon.

To DISCONCE'RT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unſettle the mind; to diſcompoſe.

You need not provoke their ſpirits by outrages; a carelеſs geſture, a word, or a look, is enough to diſconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a ſcheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFO'RMITY. n. ſ. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconſiſtency.

Lies ariſe from error and miſtake, or malice and forgery; they conſiſt in the diſagreement and diſconformity betwixt the ſpeech and the conception of the mind, or the conception of the mind and the things themſelves, or the ſpeech and the things. Hall on Providence.

DISCONGRU'ITY. n. ſ. [dis and congruity.] Diſagreement; inconſiſtency.

Death is want of capacity in the thing, to ſuſtain ſuch a duration, from the intrinſical diſconformity of the one to the other. Hale.

DISCO'NSOLATE. adj. [dis and conſole.] Void of comfort; hopeleſs; ſorrowful; melancholy.

See Caſſius all diſconſolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on his hill. Shakſp.
If patiently thy bidding they obey,
Diſmiſs them not diſconſolate. Milton.
The ladies and the knights, no ſhelter nigh,
Were dropping wet, diſconſolate and wan,
And through their thin array receiv'd the rain.
Dryden.

The moon reſts the ſunbeams to us, and ſo, by illuminating the air, takes away in ſome meaſure the diſconſolate darkneſs of our winter nights. Ray.

DISCO'NSOLATELY. adv. [from diſconſolate.] In a diſconſolate manner; comfortleſsly.

DISCONTE'NT. n. ſ. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneaſineſs at the preſent ſtate.

I ſee your brimful of diſcontent,
Your hearts of ſorrows, and your eyes of tears.
Shakſpeare.

Not that their pleaſures caus'd her diſcontent,
She ſigh'd, not that they ſtay'd, but that ſhe went. Pope.

DISCONTE'NT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneaſy at the preſent ſtate; diſſatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumſpect and ſlow diſcountenanced and diſcontent; and thoſe the eaſt fingled as fitteſt for his purpoſe. Hayward.

To DISCONTE'NT. v. a. [from the noun.] To diſſatisfy; to make uneaſy at the preſent ſtate.

I know a diſcontented gentleman,
Whoſe humble means match not his haughty ſpirit Shakſpeare.
The diſcontented now are only they
Whoſe crimes before did your juſt cauſe betray.
Dryden.

DISCONTE'NTED. participial adj. [from diſcontent.] Uneaſy; cheerleſs; malevolent.

Let us know
What will the up-your diſcontented ſword. Shak.
Theſe are, beyond compariſon, the two greateſt evils in this world; a diſeaſed body, and a diſcontented mind. Tillotſon.
The goddeſs, with a diſcontented air,
Seems to reject him, tho' ſhe grants his pray'r.
Pope.

DISCONTE'NTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from diſcontented.] Uneaſineſs; want of eaſe; diſſatisfaction.

A ſtatue built of Alexander the Great calls up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or diſcontentedneſs, in his looks. Addiſon.

DISCONTE'NTMENT. n. ſ. [from diſcontent.] The ſtate of being diſcontented; uneaſineſs.

Theſe are the vices that fill them with general diſcontentment, as though the boſom of that famous church; wherein they live, were more noiſome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nouriſhing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the beſt antidotes againſt the poiſon of diſcontentments. Bacon.

DISCONTI'NUANCE. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.]

1. Want of coheſion of parts; want of union of one part with another; diſruption.

Cauldrides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themſelves into a ſmall breed, becauſe they will not diſcontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they caſt themſelves into round drops, which is the figure that ſaveth the body moſt from diſcontinuance. Bacon.

2. Ceſſation; intermiſſion.

Let us conſider whether our approaches to him are ſweet and refreſhing, and if we are uneaſy under any long diſcontinuance of our converſation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion, or diſcontinuance of proceſs. The effect of diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatſoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but muſt ſeek to recover poſſeſſion by law. The effect of diſcontinuance of plea is, that the inſtance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the ſuit afreſh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUA'TION. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.] Diſruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; diſruption; ſeparation.

Upon any diſcontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by ſhaking the glaſs, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. n. [discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jeremiah.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakspeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be coupled in syllables and words, through the volable motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they mostly will discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue at all. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINU'ITY. n. s. [dis and continuity.] Disunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVE'NIENCE. n. s. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these discontinuances of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DI'SCORD. n. s. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakspeare.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakspeare.

I heard,
Like that of music's various parts,
The sound that makes the harmony of hearts;
To end, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king.
Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and consequentially affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.
Shakspeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh the sweetest harmony! Peacham.

To DISCO'RD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the other one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCO'RDANCE. } n. s. [from discord.]
DISCO'RDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCO'RDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was insincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind.
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant aspect of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither to reference is to be refused; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, there follows the sentence of approbation: if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCO'RDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two notes that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; insomuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictious manner.

To DISCO'VER. v. a. [découvrir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To show; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

And now will I discover your lewdness. Hosea.
Law can discover sin, but not remove. Milton.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Luke.

Eve, who unseen
Yet all had heard, with audible lament
Discover'd from the place of her retire. Milton.

5. To ken; to espy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand. Acts.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration of time, recover my knowledge of his mistake. Dryden.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up [illegible]
Discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and care will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakspeare.

Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discovered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glist'ring spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe. Milton.

DISCO'VERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the grosser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCO'VERER. n. s. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Browne.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubted in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the position or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakspeare.

DISCO'VERY. n. s. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Our late discovery have made the open sea,
That the old English none more fame have won
Beyond the west, and out of heaven's high way,
They made discovery where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.

Things that appeared invisible by the light of this world, appear of a different colour here in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be neceſſary to ſay ſomething of the ſtate to which the war hath reduced us; ſuch a diſcovery ought to be made as late as poſſible. Swift.

To DISCO'UNSEL. v. a. [dis and counſel.] To diſſuade; to give contrary advice. Obſolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity,
With temperate advice diſcounſelled. Spenſer.

DI'SCOUNT. n. ſ. [dis and count.] The ſum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood, at a large diſcount, and ſell them as well as he could Swift.

To DISCOU'NT. v. a. [from the noun.] To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
My prayers and penance ſhall diſcount for theſe,
And beg of heaven to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

The farmers, ſpitefully combin'd,
Force him to take his tithes in kind;
And Parſival diſcounts arrears
By bids for taxes and repairs. Swift.

1. The act of the underſtanding, by which it paſſes from premiſes to conſequences.

By reaſon of that original weakneſs in the inſtruments, without which the underſtanding part is not able in this world by diſcourſe to work, the very conceit of painfulneſs is a bridle to ſtay us. Hooker.

Sure he that made us with ſuch large diſcourſe,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reaſon
Toruſt in us unus'd. Shakſpeare.

The act of the mind which connects propoſitions, and deduceth concluſions from them, the ſchools call diſcourſe; and we ſhall not miſcall it, if we name it reaſon. Glanville.

2. Converſation; mutual intercourſe of language; talk.

He waxeth wiſer than himſelf, more by an hour's diſcourſe than by a day's meditation. Bacon.

In thy diſcourſe, if thou deſire to pleaſe,
All ſuch is courteous, uſeful, new, or witty;
Uſefulneſs comes by labour, wit by eaſe,
Courtely grows in court, news in the city. Herbert.

The vanquiſh'd party with the victors join'd,
Nor wanted ſweet diſcourſe, the banquet of the mind. Dryden.

3. Effuſion of language; ſpeech.

Topical and ſuperficial arguments, of which there is ſtore to be found on both ſides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious diſcourſe, ſerve only to amuſe the underſtanding and entertain company. Locke.

DISH. n. s. [diſc, Saxon; dysc, Erse; discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish.
I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar with this particularity in it, that it is not square like a dish at one end: but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish,
Or do his grey hairs any violence? Milton.

A ladle for our silver dish,
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakspeare.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.
Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

The contrast your pretence with this base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.
Shakspeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish
More than another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

DISHO'NEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an unlike or incongruous to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence. South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right or wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature. Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow wish we be married—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.
Shakspeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.
Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

Nor how her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

DISHO'NESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, for honest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress do I!—Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakspeare.

DISHO'NOUR. n. s. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her, by my life,
She never knew harm doing. Shakspeare.

To DISHO'NOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.
Shakspeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune. Shak.

A woman that dishonours her husband, shall be judged wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.
Ecclesiasticus.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prerogatives ravish'd from his hands.
Dryden's Iliad.

DISHO'NOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

The dominions of biſhopricks the kings of England did ever retain to all their dominions, when the pope's uſurped authority was at the higheſt Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; aſcendant.

Objects; used to excite ought to be more faſhed than thoſe call behind, and to have dominion over things confuſed and tranſient.
Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, viſible and inviſible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers Coloſſians.

DON n. ſ. [dominus, Latin.] The Spaniſh title for a gentleman: as, Don Quixote. It is with us uſed ludicrouſly

For ſhame, my maſter Don,
Put up your ſword in ſafety, and beg a peace
To your two ſervants, and to all the reſt
Dryden.

To DON. v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to inveſt with: the contrary to doff. Obſolete.

For pity of the lonely maiden bed,
And doffed her coſtly gear to don mean hue.
Fairfax.
Her maſter and her dame
Won in the fields whereſoever ſhe came,
And treated her as their own child. Shakſpeare.

DO'NARY n. ſ. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to ſacred uſes.

DONA'TION. n. ſ. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of beſtowing.

He gave us only over beaſt, fiſh, fowl,
Dominion abſolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
After donation there is an abſolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given: which being ſo alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

However the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the ſenſe thereof is ſo imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himſelf unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh's Eſſays.
The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee uſurp'd;
Other donation none thou canſt produce. Milton.

DO'NATIVE. n. ſ. [donatif, French; from donatus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largeſs; a preſent; a doſe of money diſtributed.

The Roman emperor's cuſtom was, at certain ſolemn times, to beſtow on his ſoldiers a donative; which donative they received wearing laurel-lands upon their heads. Hooker.
They were entertained with publick ſhews and donatives, to make them more eaſily digeſt their loſt liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either preſentation to the ordinary, or inſtitution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowell.

Never did people carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure.
Cowley.

DONE. The part. paſſ. of To do.

Another like fair tree elſe grew nearby,
Wherof whoſo did eat, eſſoons did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenſer's Faerie Queene.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded: when a wager is offered, he that accepts it ſays done.

Dare the wager? Shakſpeare, Twelfth Night.
One thing, ſweet-heart, I will aſk,
Take me for a new-faſhion'd mark.
—Done, that my bargain ſhall be ſure,
I'll crow my mark off when I kiſs. Cleaveland.
'Twas ſaid and done, and the fox, his opponent, was to be the judge. L'Eſtrange.

DO'NJON. n. ſ. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The higheſt and ſtrongeſt tower of the caſtle, in which priſoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now uſed of ſubterraneous priſons

The grete tour, that was ſo ſtrong and thicke,
Wherin the caſtle was the cheef ſtrength,
Wherin the kinges were in priſon,
Was ev'n ymyned to the garden-wall,
There as this Emely had her playeing. Chaucer.

DO'NOR. n. ſ. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a beſtower; one who gives any thing.

Letters muſt beſiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and treem'ling ladies wait
The promiſed dole. Dryden's Juvenal.
It is a mighty check to her fruitful temper to conſider how often good deſigns are fruſtrated and perverted to ill purpoſes, which, could the donors themſelves have foreſeen, they would have been very loth to promote Atterbury.

DO'NSHIP. n. ſ. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of thoſe,
Your boſom-friends, as you ſuppoſe;
But Ralph himſelf, your truſty ſquire,
Wh' has dragg'd your Worſhip out o' th' mire.
Hudibras.

DOO'DLE. n. ſ. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little: fainéant.] A trifler; an idler.

To DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didſt not doom
So ſtrictly, but much more to pity incline. Milton.

2. To condemn to any puniſhment; to ſentence.
He may be doom'd to chains, to ſhame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus ſhall mount his throne. Smith

Juſtly th' impartial fates conſpire,
Deeming that ſon to be the fire
Of ſuch another ſon. Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.
Minos, the ſtrict inquiſitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his aſſeſſor, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Abſolves the juſt, and dooms the guilty ſouls.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.
Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And ſhall that tongue give pardon to a ſlave. Shakſpeare

5. To deſtine; to command by uncontrollable authority.
Fate and the gods, by their ſupreme command,
Have doom'd our ſhips to ſeek the Latian land.
Dryden's Æneid.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Deſtin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.
Granville

Doom. n. ſ. [dom, Sax. dom, Dutch.]
1. Judicial ſentence; judgment.
He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highneſs' doom of life or death. Shakſpeare

To Satan, firſt in ſin, his doom applied,
Though in myſterious terms, judg'd as then beſt. Milton

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Muſt have been loſt, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom ſevere. Milton

In the great day, wherein the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be laid open, no one ſhall be made to anſwer for what he knows nothing of, but ſhall receive his doom, his conſcience accuſing or excuſing him Locke

2. The great and final judgment.
Search Windſor Caſtle, elves, within and out:
Strew good luck, ouphes, on every ſacred room,
That it may ſtand till the perpetual doom. Shakſp.

3. Condemnation; judicial ſentence.
Revoke thy doom,
Or whilſt I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou doſt evil Shakſp. King John

4. Determination declared
It muſt go for, let it be ſo gently urg'd
—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Claudio Shakſpeare

5. The ſtate to which one is deſtined.
By day the web and loom,
A lonely houſeſtold task, ſhall be your doom Dryden's Fables

6. Ruin; deſtruction.
From the ſame foes, at laſt, both felt their doom,
And the ſame age ſaw learning fall, and Rome.
Pope

Doo'msday. n. ſ. [doom and day.]
1. The day of final and univerſal judgment; the laſt, the great day.
Men, wives, and children ſtare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomſday. Shakſp. Julius Cæſar.

They may ſerve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomſday. Brown.

Our ſouls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomſday wander in the ſhades of night:
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in ſunſhine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of ſentence or condemnation.
And ſoul's day is my body's doomſday. Shakſp.

Doomsday-book. n. ſ. [doomſday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the eſtates of the kingdom were regiſtered.
The Danes alſo brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomſday-book. Camden.

DOOR. n. ſ. [bop, bupe, Saxon; dorris, Erſe.]
1. The gate of a houſe; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is uſed of houſes, and gates of cities or publick buildings; except in the licence of poetry.
All the caſtle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free will open flew. Fairy Q.
In the ſide, a door
Contriv'd; and of proviſions laid in large,
For man and beaſt. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt
To the ſame end men ſev'ral paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead. Denham.
For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a houſe without a door to conduct you in. Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a houſe: often in the plural, doors.
Lay one piece of fiſh or fleſh in the open air, and another of the ſame kind and bigneſs within doors Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
Let him doubt whether his cloaths be warm, and go naked, whether his houſe be firm, and live without doors. Duties of Piety.
Martin's office is now the ſecond door in the ſtreet, where he will ſee Parnel Arbuthnot.
Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never ſaw the actions of their own ſpecies, puſh at thoſe who approach them with their foreheads Addiſon's Spectator.
The ſultan entered again the peaſant's houſe, and turned the owner out of doors Addiſon.

3. Entrance; portal.
The tender blades of grain appear;
And buds, that yet the froſt of March fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to cloth the year. Dryden.

4. Paſſage; avenue; means of approach.
The indiſpenſable neceſſity of ſincere obedience ſhuts the door againſt all temptations to carnal ſecurity Hammond

5. Out of Door, or Doors. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly ſent away
Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,
With haſh voice and uplifted brow,
To ſervile duties, thou would'ſt ſcorn no more;
The gods and the world put out of doors
Davenant's Preface.
His imagery is of fatherhood or motherhood, of ſons or daughters, and Cain is for ever over his brother Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.
In any of which parts if I have failed, the fault muſt wholly ſtand at my doors. Dryden

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.
A feaſt is next door to a broil, and a riot unpunniſhed is but next door to a tumult.
L'Eſtrange.

Do'orcase. n. ſ. [door and caſe.] The frame in which the door is incloſed.
The making of frames for doorcaſes, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces. Moxon.

Do'orkeeper. n. ſ. [door and keeper.] Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a houſe.
He that hath given the following aſſiſtances to thee, deſires to be even a doorkeeper in God's houſe, and to be a ſervant to the meaneſt of God's ſervants. Taylor's Preface.

Do'quet. n. ſ. A paper containing a warrant.
Before the inſtitution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchaſed without an oath. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

Do'rmant. adj. [dormant, French.]
1. Sleeping.
He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can inſure his anger is dormant: or ſhould he ſeem to rouſe, 'tis well noſing him, and he will ſleep like a top. Congreve's Old Bachelor.
With this radius he is ſaid to ſtrike and kill his prey, for which he lies as it were, dormant, till it ſwims within his reach. Grew's Muſæum.

2. In a ſleeping poſture.
If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant Brown.

Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton.

DREAM. n. s. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Marie Caffiodore, with more ingenuity than truth, from somnus ex fide, the remedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Ἔστιν ἄρα ὕπνος καὶ ὀνείρων ἦ μακὸς ἀκοῦσαι,
Τὸν σωτῆρα βροτῶν, ἦ φίλον ἐν κακοῖς.
Antibol.]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.
We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
In dreams they frantick precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.
Glorious dreams stand ready to relieve
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryd.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.
Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each bur, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakspeare.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.
Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasions, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.
I dreamed that I was conveyed into a white and beautiful plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.
I have been dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dreams.
Shakspeare.
I have mighty fears
Dreams of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throats,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakspeare.

3. To think; to imagine.
Thou boy, I know [illegible] thing [illegible] king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shakf.
[illegible] never dreamt of the things, [illegible]
[illegible] of more than a wretched [illegible] Rowe.

And dream the future fight, and early rise.
Dryden.

DRE'AMER. n. s. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.
The vision fled, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer wak'ned in a mortal fright. Dryd.
If our dreamer please to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be waked into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.
Sometimes he angers me
With telling of the monstrous'st sin and
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakf.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a rêveur.
The cities of fruit his most devours,
But only taste the pearl and flow'rs;
And he must be no idle dreamer,
Who loves the pie and grows the steamer.
Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

Some account him fabulous, becauſe he carries up the Egyptian dynaſties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale.

Greece was divided into ſeveral dynaſties, which our author has enumerated under their reſpective princes. Pope.

DY'SCRASY. n. ſ. [δυσκρασια.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a diſtemperature, when ſome humour or quality abounds in the body. Diſt.

In this pituitous dyſcraſy of blood, we muſt vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermiſſions. Floyer on the Humours.

DYSE'NTERY. n. ſ. [dyſenterie, French, from δυσεντερια.] A looſeneſs, wherein very ill humours flow off by ſtool, and are alſo ſometimes attended with blood. Diſ.

From an unuſual inceſſancy of the motion, and perpetual changes of the wind from eaſt to weſt, proceed epidemical dyſenteries. Arbuth.

DYSPE'PSY. n. ſ. [δυσπεψια.] A difficulty of digeſtion, or bad fermentation in the ſtomach or guts. Diſ.

DY'SPHONY. n. ſ. [δυσφωνια.] A difficulty in ſpeaking, occaſioned by an ill diſpoſition of the organs. Diſ.

DYSPNŒ'A. n. ſ. [δυσπνοια.] A difficulty of breathing; ſtraitneſs of breath.

DY'SURY. n. ſ. [δυσουρια.] A difficulty in making urine.

It doth end in a dyſentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual piſſing, ſtrangury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E, Has two ſounds; long, as ſcene, and ſhort, as men. E is the moſt frequent vowel in the Engliſh language; for it not only is uſed like the reſt in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cāre, cāne; mēn, mēne, gīp, gīpe; gīld, gīlde; bīd, bīde; cūb, cūbe; cūp, cūpe; thīn, thīne; nēd, nēde; tūn, tūne; plūm, plūme. Yet it ſometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as, gīve, haſtīle, ſīge, give. Anciently almoſt every word ended with e, as for can, came, ; for yeer, yeere; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at firſt a ſoft ſound, like the female e of the French; and that afterward it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verſe required, till at laſt it became univerſally ſilent.

Ea has the ſound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the appoſition of e to the end of the word; as mēn, mēan; fēl, fēal; nēt, nēat; nīt, nīte.

EACH pron. [Ilc, Saxon; elk, Dutch & ilk, Scottiſh.]

1. Either of two.

Though your eaſes of different greatneſs be,
Yet both we for our fathers ſhe eſpouſe,
His to recride, and ours to be inclos'd. Daniel.

2. Every one of any number. This ſenſe is rare, except in poetry.

The meaſures and numbers, and each how he
To be th' inventor miſs'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his ſtrength. Milton.

Be ſure of it, give each of the creatures time,
Thou art not to be haſty, there's much moiſture
Tiny temperance is viſible behind. Ben. Johnſon.

Wiſe Macrobius, who was ſtor'd
To all that each fam'd ſchool before. Dryden.

To EACH the correſpondent word is other, whether it be uſed of two, or of a greater number.

I go that they may work each other. Shakſpeare.
Let each office with the other than themſelves. Bacon.

Loveſick of whom? each reaſon is on fire;
Beauty and wit ſhine for each other there,
Brightning our ſenſes. Thus all all improve. Addiſon's Cato.

EAD. [ead, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the ſimple names, denotes happineſs, or bleſſedneſs. Thus Eadward is a happy protector; Eadulf, happy aſſiſtance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius, Eupolemus, Fauſtus, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in ſome meaſure reſemble. Ead may alſo in ſome caſes be derived from the Saxon eath, which ſignifies eaſy, gentle, mild. Gibſ. Camden.

EA'GLESTONE. n. ſ. A ſtone ſaid to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their neſts, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's neſt from thunder. Calmet.

The eaglefone contains, in a cavity within it, a ſmall looſe ſtone, which rattles when it is broken, and every foſſil, with a nucleus in it, is ſo termed the name. The analogy between a ſtone containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers expreſs it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it muſt have great virtues and effect in accelerating or retarding delivery; ſo that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion: and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On ſuch idle and imaginary virtues was raiſed all the credit which this famous foſſil poſſeſſed for many ages. Hill

If you ſtop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noiſe of rattle; and ſo do the ſtones, or eaglefone, which hath a little ſtone within it. Bacon

EA'GLET. n. ſ. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

Woodward.

4. This world oppoſed to other ſcenes of exiſtence.

What are theſe,
So wither'd, and ſo wild in their attire,
That look not like the inhabitants of the earth,
And yet are on't?
Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of thoſe myſteries which lie
Will not be underſtood to know.
Shakſpeare.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language.
Genesis.

6. Country; diſtinct region.

In vain ſet foot on earth the ſons of Greece,
Theſe heathen Saxons, and regain'd their earth,
As earth recovers from the flood.
Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for to ſow,
Two earths, at the leaſt, ere ye ſow it, bestow.
Tuſſer.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. ſ. [earth and quake.] Tremour or convulſion of the earth.

This ſubterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth ſtopt, by ſome accidental glut or obſtruction in the paſſages through which it uſed to aſcend, and being preternaturally aſſembled in greater quantity into one place, cauſes a great rarefaction and intumeſcence of the water of the abyſs, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyſs, occaſions that agitation and concuſſion which we call an earthquake. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Theſe tumults were like an earthquake, ſhaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horrour. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or ſucceſs,
Theſe might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that reſpect, that awful homage paid me:
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
That with a ſilent earthquake ſhook his ſoul. Dryden.

The country, by reaſon of its vaſt caverns and ſubterraneous fires, has been miſerably torn by earthquakes, ſo that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addiſon on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and ſhake.] Having power to ſhake the earth, or to raiſe earthquakes.

By the earthſhaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys grave majeſtick pace. Milton.

Now ſcarce withdrawn the fierce earthſhaking pow'r,
Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the ſav'ring hour;
Back to their cave ſhe bade the winds to fly,
And bath'd the bluſt'ring brethren of the ſky. Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. ſ. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

3. Reſt after labour; intermiſſion of labour.

Give yourſelves eaſe from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

For with ſuch means, which they hard,
Following with eaſe, if favour'd by the fates,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian ſtate;
If not, no labour can the fee conſtrain,
And ſtrength of ſtubborn arms and ſteel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconſtraint; freedom from harſhneſs, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True eaſe in writing comes from art, not chance;
As thoſe move eaſieſt who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. At EASE. In a ſtate of undiſturbed leiſure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praiſe, may lie at eaſe,
In coſtly grotts and marble palaces. Dryden.

Men of parts and penetration were not only to diſpute at their eaſe, but were to act according to the reſult of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and ſcience in general is the buſineſs only of thoſe who are at eaſe and leiſure. Locke.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and eaſe children the beſt you can: but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign my pretences to the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Ded. to State of Love.

Not form provok'd, she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. ſ. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, kind turns are not laid
With half the easiness that they are paid.
Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half atchieved,
And for whose easiness I aim it gave'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that some would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, we should do it no more than a tolerable love is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The surest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundation of it early in literality, and in easiness to part with to others whatever they have of like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not close; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray.

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea; opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide watery glass
Gaz'd hot, and by the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thaw, which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot toward the deep. Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port:
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb when you speak of. Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never flows again. Raleigh's Hist.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him prisoner be,
That I his bounty ebbs of life may see. Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence. Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakspeare.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
——I'll teach you how to flow.

——Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakspeare. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves delay!
For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halesax.

E'BEN. E'BON. E'BONY. n. s. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon.

Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay.

EBRI'ETY. n. s. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vul. Err.

EBRI'LLADE. n. s. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. s. [ebriositas, Latin] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLI'TION. n. s. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emercation, as also a crasse and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown's Vul. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuthnot.

ECCE'NTRICAL. ECCE'NTRICK. adj. [excentricus Latin.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phænomena, framed to their concentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon.

To move his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down
By centrick or excentric hard to tell. Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scribbl'd o'er,
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very excentrick? Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatſoever affairs paſs ſuch a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which muſt needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his maſter. Bacon's Eſſays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from ſtated and conſtant methods.

Their motion, like others of the times, ſeems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles.

A character of more contorted virtue, is the more exact image of human life, becauſe it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to ſenſe produce, Common and plain, or wond'rous and abſtruſe, From nature's conſtant or eccentrick laws, The thoughtful ſoul then gen'ral inference draws, That an effect muſt preſuppoſe a cauſe. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY. n. ſ. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The ſtate of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reaſon of the ſun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excurſion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for ſo I account his journies abroad, met no good news. Walton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the diſtance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. ſ. [ἔκχυμωσις] Livid ſpots or blotches in the ſkin, made by extravaſated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymoſis may be defined an extravaſation of the blood in or under the ſkin, the ſkin remaining whole. Wiſeman.

Cauſtions are accompanied with tumors and ecchymoſes. Wiſeman.

ECCLESIA'STICAL. } adj. [eccleſiaſticus, Latin]
ECCLESIA'STICK }
Relating to the church; not civil.

Is diſcipline an eccleſiaſtical matter or civil? If an eccleſiaſtical, it muſt belong to the duty of the miniſters. Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwiſe little fond of obſcure terms, yet in their ſermons are liberal of thoſe which they find in eccleſiaſtical writers. Swift.

A church of England man has a true veneration for the ſcheme eſtabliſhed among us of eccleſiaſtick government. Swift.

ECCLESIA'STICK. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] A perſon dedicated to the miniſtries of religion.

The ambition of the eccleſiaſticks deſtroyed the purity of the church. Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPRO'TICKS. n. ſ. [ἔκ and κόπρος.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, ſo as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the inteſtines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by ſuch means as are eccoproticks. Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]
ECHINA'TED. } Briſtled like a hedgehog; ſet with prickles.

Echinated pyrites in ſhape approaches the echinated cryſtalline balls. Woodward on Foſſils.

E'CHINUS. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. A hedge-hog.

2. A ſhellfiſh ſet with prickles.

3. [With botaniſts.] The prickly head, cover of the ſeed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughneſs of the carving, reſembling the prickly rind of a cheſtnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is uſed by moſt architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Compoſite orders; and generally ſet next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. ſ. [ἠχω; echo, Latin.]

1. Echo was ſuppoſed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a ſound for love of Narciſſus.

The pleaſant myrtle may teach the unfortunate Echo In theſe woods to reſound the renowned name of a goddeſs. Sidney.

2. The return or repercuſſion of any ſound.

The ſound, filling great ſpaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

3. The ſound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds, Replying ſhrilly to the well-tun'd horns, As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakſpeare.

Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds ſhall make the welkin anſwer them, And fetch ſhrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shakſpeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs! With other echo late I taught your ſhades To anſwer, and reſound far other ſong! Milton.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I ſing; The woods ſhall anſwer, and their echo ring. Pope.

'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence, The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To reſound; to give the repercuſſion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakſp. Taming of Shrew.

Through rocks and caves the name of Delia ſounds; Del a each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be founded back.

Hark, how the ſound diſturbs imperious Rome! Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome! Her mitr'd princes hear the echoing noiſe, And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To ſend back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our ſuperſtitions do but echo the ſame note. Decay of Piety.

With peals of ſhouts the Tyrians praiſe the ſong: Theſe peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Æneid.

One great death deforms the dreary ground; The echo'd woes from diſtant rocks reſound. Pope.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. ſ. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expoſtulation.

The eclairciſſement ended in the diſcovery of the miſtake. Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. ſ. [French.] Splendour; ſhow; luſtre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, ſurpriſe, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope's Eſſay on Homer.

ECLE'CTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικὸς.] Selecting; chooſing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick ſect, and choſe out of each ſect poſitions as came neareſt truth. Watts on the Mind.

ECLE'GMA. n. ſ. [ἔκ and λείχω.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with ſyrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice ſtick. Quincy.

ECLI'PSE. n. ſ. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obſcuration of the luminaries of heaven: the ſun is eclipſed by the interveſtion of the moon; the moon by the interpoſition of the earth. The word originally ſignifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipſe. Shakſpeare.

Planets, planet-ſtruck, real eclipſe Then ſuffer'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

So though the ſun victorious be, And from a dark eclipſe ſet free, The influence, which we fondly fear, Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipſe of the moon is when the atmoſphere of the earth, between the ſun and the moon, hinders the light of the ſun from falling upon it, being reflected by the moon: if the light of the ſun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipſe; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke.

2. Darkneſs; obſcuration.

All the poſterity of our firſt parents ſuffered a perpetual eclipſe of ſpiritual life. Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our ſcatterings and eclipſes. King Ch.

To ECLI'PSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipſed moon her throne reſign. Sandys.

Now if the earth were far, the darken'd moon Would ſeem to all eclipſ'd as well as noon. Creech.

2. To extinguiſh; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair ſun, Born to eclipſe thy life this afternoon. Shakſp.

3. To cloud; to obſcure.

They had been tokens of more than common greatneſs, howſoever now eclipſ'd with fortune. Sidney.

Praiſe him to his father:—
—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipſe, and caſt a cloud on his. Denham's Sophy.

Let other muſes write his proſp'rous fate, Of conquer'd nations tell, and kingdoms rear'd: But mine ſhall ſing of his eclipſ'd eſtate, Which, like the ſun's, more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He deſcended from his Father, and eclipſed the glory of his divine majeſty with a veil of fleſh. Taylor's Sermons.

4. To diſgrace.

She told the king that her huſband was eclipſed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majeſty had ſhewed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himſelf engroſs'd All power, and us eclipſ'd. Milton's Par. Loſt.

ECLI'PTICK. n. ſ. [ἐκλειπτικὸς.] A great circle of the ſphere, ſuppoſed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30′. which is the ſun's greateſt declination. This is by ſome called via ſolis, or the way of the ſun, becauſe the ſun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe; but in the new aſtronomy the ecliptick is that part among the fixed ſtars, which the earth appears to deſcribe to an eye placed in the ſun, as in its annual motion it runs round the ſun from weſt to eaſt. If you ſuppoſe this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve ſigns. Harris.

All ſtars that have their diſtance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progreſſion of time, have declination ſouthward, and move beyond the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The terraqueous globe had the ſame ſite and poſition, in reſpect of the ſun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at preſent. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

You muſt conceive an imaginary plane, which, paſſing through the centre of the ſun and the earth, extends itſelf on all ſides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLI'PTICK. adj. Deſcribed by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The ſun revolving through th' ecliptick way,
Effects the various ſeaſons of the year.
Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. ſ. [ἐκλογὴ.] A paſtoral poem, ſo called becauſe Virgil called his paſtorals eclogues.

Wou exclaiming praiſes Baſilius gave this eclogue my man may gueſs, that knows love is better than ſpectacles to make every thing ſeem great. Sidney.

It is not ſufficient that the ſentences be hoarſe, the words of a clogue ſhould be ſo too. Pope.

ECONO'MICK. } ECONO'MICAL. } adj. [from economy]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of a houſehold.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Does as a nurſe, or as a mother ſerve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And buſy care, her houſehold to preſerve.
Davies.

In economical affairs, having propoſed the government of a family, we conſider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are ſo plainly economical, as even to deſire that the leaſt be well waſhed, and well ſcrubbed. Watts's Improvement.

ECO'NOMY. n. ſ. [οἰκονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, œconomy; but œ being no diphthong in Engliſh, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a houſehold.

By St. Paul's œconomy the heir differs nothing from a ſervant, while he is in his minority, for a ſervant ſhould differ nothing from a child in the ſubſtantial part Taylor.

2. Diſtribution of expence.

Particular towns are not laid out to the greateſt advantage in his œconomy; but are ſome times ſuffered to run waſte, while he is only careful of the main Dryden.

3. Frugality; diſcretion of expence; laudable parſimony.

I have no other notion of œconomy, than that it is the parent of liberty and eaſe. Swift.

4. Diſpoſition of things; regulation.

All the diving and infinitely wiſe ways of œconomy that God could uſe towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that courſe of living which is moſt agreeable to our nature. Hammond.

5. The diſpoſition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we ſee the œconomy and diſpoſition of poems better obſerved than in Terence. Ben Jonſon.

If this œconomy muſt be obſerved in the meaneſt parts of an epick poem, what ſoul, though ſent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and ſciences, can be ſufficient to inform the body of ſo great a work? Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

6. Syſtem of matter; diſtribution of every thing active or paſſive to its proper place.

Theſe the ſtatiſts aid,
That by a conſtant ſeparation made,
They may a due œconomy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain.
Blackmore.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. ſ. [ἐκ and φράσσω.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, ſo as to promote their diſcharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free courſe, ventilate it, and tranſpiration, by ſuitable purges and ephractick medicines. Harvey.

E'CSTASY. n. ſ. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any paſſion by which the thoughts are abſorbed, and in which the mind is for a time loſt.

Follow them ſwiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecſtaſy
May now provoke them to. Shakſp. Tempeſt.
'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecſtaſy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecſtaſy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Exceſſive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecſtaſy!
Shakſpeare.

The religious pleaſure of a well-diſpoſed mind moves gently, and therefore conſtantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecſtaſies; but is like the pleaſure of health, ſtill and ſober. South.

Each deep'ned, and delighting gives
The pleaſing ecſtaſy which each receives. Prior.

A pleaſure which no language can expreſs;
An ecſtaſy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart Philips' Diſtreſt Mother.

3. Enthuſiaſm; exceſſive elevation and abſorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me ſing;
Which when I did, he on the tender graſs
Would ſit, and hearken even to ecſtaſy. Milton.

4. Exceſſive grief or anxiety. This is not now uſed.

Sighs and groans, and ſhrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent ſorrow ſeems
A modern ecſtaſy. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In reſtleſs ecſtaſy. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

5. Madneſs; diſtraction. This ſenſe is not now in uſe.

Now reaſon moves
Her palſied wing, paſt all her depth in doubts,
And is an ecſtaſy to fools. Milton.

Now this melancholy and moſt ſovereign reaſon,
Like ſweet bells jangled out of tune, and harſh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blaſted with ecſtaſy. Shakſpeare's Hamlet.

E'CSTASIED. adj. [from ecſtaſy] Raviſhed; filled with enthuſiaſm.

Theſe are as common to the inanimate things as to the moſt ecſtaſied ſoul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL. } ECSTA'TICK. } adj. [ἐκστατικὸς.]

1. Raviſhed; rapturous; elevated beyond the uſual bounds of nature.

Theſe dotmens ſoul in holy viſion ſit,
In penſive trance, and anguiſh, and ecſtatick fit.
Milton.

When one of them, after an ecſtatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was ſeverely rebuked, and bidden to worſhip God. Stirling Serm.

Infuſive aſtarkie may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds deſcend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raiſed to the higheſt degree of joy.

To gain Poſſeſſion one employs in ſchemes;
One graſps a Cecrops in ecſtatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This ſenſe is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecſtatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myſelf. Norris.

E'CTYPE. n. ſ. [ἔκτυπος.] A copy.

The complex ideas of ſubſtances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

E'CURIE. n. ſ. [French; equus, Latin.] A place covered for the lodging or houſing of horſes.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. ſ. [edacitas, Latin.] Voracity; ravenouſneſs; greedineſs; rapacity.

The wolf is a beaſt of great edacity and digeſtion: it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in uſe.

To add ſtrength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the ſtakes with ſome ſmall long poles on each ſide. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

E'DDER. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in uſe.

In lopping and felling, ſave edder and ſtake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make.
Tuſſer.

E'DDY. n. ſ. [eb, backward; epa, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by ſome repercuſſion, or oppoſite wind, runs contrary to the main ſtream.

My praiſes are as a bulruſh upon a ſtream: if they ſink not, 'tis becauſe they are born up by the ſtrength of the current, which ſupports their lightneſs; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they firſt began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wind waves matter'd him, and ſuck'd him in,
And ſmiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian waſtes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes deſcend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the ſands, and ſweep whole plains away.
Addiſon's Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And caſt with eddie winds it round and round,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground.
Dryden's Virgil.

EDEMATO'SE. adj. [οἴδημα.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written œdamatous.

A ſcirrhus obſtructing the glands may be watery, ædematoſe, and ſchirrous, according to the viſcoſity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

EDE'NTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth. Diſt.

EDGE. n. ſ. [ecge, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Scize upon Fife, give to the edge o' th' ſword
His wife, his babes. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,
Muſt forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-ſheathed knife,
No more ſhall cut his maſter. Shakſpeare.

'Tis ſlander,
Whoſe edge is ſharper than the ſword. Shakſp.

2. A narrow part riſing from a broader.

Some narrow their ground one, and then ſow it upon an edge. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

5. Brink; margin; extremity.
The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.
We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.
Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.
Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind.
Then various cares the cheerful thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakspeare's Richard III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.
A harsh grating tone setteth the teeth on edge. Bacon.

To EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.
There did she rolling her allaying eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.
I felt'd along a mass of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.
Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and saphires, swept the plain. Dryden.
I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.
By such restlessness the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged. Hayward.
He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

5. To put forward beyond a line.
Edging by degrees their enemy forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from eb, backward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.
I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleomenes.

E'DGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.
We find that subtile or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

E'DGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakspeare's Richard III.
They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.

E'DGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.
There must be no playing with things shewed; no jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.
I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what part is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.
Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DGING. n. s. [from edge.]
1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.
The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And bordered with a wavy edging round. Dryden.

E'DICT. n. s. [edictum, Latin.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.
When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.
The great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's. Shakesp.
Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICA'TION. n. s. [ædificatio, Latin.]
1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.
Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.
2. Improvement; instruction.
Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

E'DIFICE. n. s. [ædificium, Latin.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.
My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
God built
So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.
The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.
As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.
We must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal, than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

E'DIFIER. n. s. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To E'DIFY. v. a. [ædifico, Latin.]
1. To build.
There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.
Men have edify'd
A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.
He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.
Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection unto that thereunto Hooker.
Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation Taylor.
He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to practise. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.
You shall hardly edify me, that these nations might not, by the Law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only power to make a moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

E'DILE. n. s. [ædilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.
The edile, but let him be apprehended. Shakspeare.

EDITION. n. s. [editio, Latin.]
1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.
This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.
2. Republication: generally with some revisal or correcting.
There are of the second edition. Shakspeare.
The business of our redemption is, to rub out the defaced copy of the creation, to repair God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.
I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

E'DITOR. n. s. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.
When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance to an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison.
This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope.

To E'DUCATE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.
Then young succession all their cares employ,
They breed, they breed, instruct and educate;
And make provision for the future state. Dryden's Virgil.
Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCA'TION. n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.
Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.
All nations have agreed in the necessity of a civil education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDU'CE. v. a. [educo, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a ſtate of occultation.

That the world was educed out of the power of ſpace, give that as a reaſon of its original; in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glanville.

This matter muſt have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.

Th' eternal art educes good from ill,
Grafts on this paſſion our beſt principle. Pope.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not to worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or neceſſity, like Ulyſſes and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art ſhall carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great deſigns.
Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In ſhew, a marvellous indifferently compoſed ſenate eccleſiaſtical was to govern, but in effect one only man ſhould, as the ſpirit and ſoul of the reſidue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the buſineſs and the crowd,
Seems at this diſtance but a darker cloud,
And is to him, who rightly things eſteems,
No other in effect than what it ſeems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer
Can ſerve my turn? Forgive me my foul murther!
That cannot be, ſince I am ſtill poſſeſt
Of thoſe effects for which I did the murther,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
Shakſpeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addiſon.

EFFLU'ENCE. n. s. [effluo, Latin.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milton.

These scintillations are not the accension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluvium discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night.
Prior.

EFFLU'VIA. } n. s. [from effluo, Lat.]
EFFLU'VIUM. } Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electrick body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluation, bodies tended to the earth. Pneumatics.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere, which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If those effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat?
Blackmore.

E'FFLUX. n. s. [effluxus, Latin.]

I own my prowess, and I own it too,
Where worthies are rehears'd, not as bad, but new;
Where, if our fathers basely fell all season's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and example of their elders. Spenser's State of Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Fit-a-lurten synod, and assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; hae the rule
Chaos of presbyty, where laymen rule
With the same woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

E'LDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should fall to which 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth one least of hers,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprung up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker.

E'LDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [eal, ealdor, ealdyste, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had bribe'd him to prolong their space. Dryden.

2. That has lived most years.

Eldest parents figure those the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPA'NE. n. f. [Inula, Latin.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Ibid.

To ELE'CT. v. a [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry the Son is chosen king though young,
And Lewis of France, elected first begun'd. Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elected a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELE'CT. adj [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the archbishop reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made of him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELE'CTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the [illegible] of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you [illegible] they would choose the meetest? Hooker.

Him, not by election,
But natural necessity, begot. Dryden.

As charity is, nothing can more [illegible] lustre and beauty than a prudent [illegible] and a fit application of it to the [illegible]

2. The power of choice.

For what [illegible] not a moving word,
Which by the judging ear, and counting wit
Now at God's pow'r should her election [illegible]
Her mind [illegible] would cease, and stand [illegible]

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon sinners to turn them and live; he tells us, that he has set before us and death, and referred it to our own [illegible] which we will choose. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these evils is common to [illegible] but out of a very near knowledge of things which to clear the mind [illegible] it is the less apt to [illegible] Bacon.

In favour, to one more with much difference and election good for stomach those preferred more than taken, and the rest made officious Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to [illegible] life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have [illegible] results in the practice of virtue.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what passion popular heat, elections were carried on [illegible]

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election [illegible]

ELE'CTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem [illegible] of less force, and unfitter for action abroad Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness [illegible] eth in the elective act of the understanding. Government of the Tongue.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to the other.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those [illegible] cies electively, I am not subtile enough to [illegible] Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon prospect to themselves an end of their operations. Glanville.

ELE'CTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the bird of electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELE'CTORATE. n. f. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison's Freeholder.

ELE'CTRE. n. f. [electrum, Latin.]

Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electrick.

A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum.
ELE'CTRICK. } See ELECTRE.]

Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electrick bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the accurately poised jett and amber, but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown.

An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtile, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or brass-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light.

Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRI'CITY. n. f. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, hath excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELE'CTUARY. n. f. [electarium, Cælius Aurel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle

ELEEMO'SYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterious to and dependent on itself. Glanville's Scepsis.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

E'LEGANCE. } n. f. [elegantia, Latin.]
E'LEGANCY. }

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

E'LEGANT. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Ti'ties themselves are elegant in him. Pope.

There may'st thou find some elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

E'LEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Roscommon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGI'ACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay.

E'LEGY. n. f. [elegus, Latin.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth denying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

E'LEMENT. n. f. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should loose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakspeare.

My dearest sister fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakspeare.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakſp. King Lear.

The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent.

Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
——One face that promises no element
In such a business. Shakſp. Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To E'LEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, as those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublunary, lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elements it. Donne.

ELE'MENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That fatal mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war.

Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTA'RITY. n. f. [from elementary.] The ſimplicity of nature, or abſence of compoſition; being uncompounded.

A very large claſs of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEMK'NTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or conſtituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious ſediment of terreſtrial matter, and is not a ſimple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary ſalts of animals are not the ſame as they appear by diſtillation. Arbuthnot.

2. Initial; rude.

ELE'MI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a reſin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattiſh maſſes, or in cylinders, of a yelloviſh colour. It is very rare in Europe, and ſuppoſed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The ſpurious or American elemi, almoſt the only kind known, is of a whitiſh colour, with a greater or leſs greeniſh or yelloviſh tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Braſilians wound, and collect the reſin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELE'NCH. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a ſophiſm.

The firſt deluſion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation might be the ſame elench continued, as when he ſaid, Ye ſhall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you ſhall not incur preſent death. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Diſcover the fallacies of our common adverſary, that old ſophiſter, who puts the moſt abuſive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

ELE'OTS. n. f. Some name the apples in requeſt in the cider countries ſo; not known by that name in ſeveral parts of England. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

E'LEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largeſt of all quadrupeds, of whoſe ſagacity, faithfulneſs, prudence, and even underſtanding, many ſurpriſing relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all ſorts of pulſe; and is ſaid to be extremely long lifed. He is ſupplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and ſerves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glaſſes, elephants with holes.
Shakſpeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courteſy; His legs are for neceſſity, not flexure. Shakſpeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd ſhall Cæſar's Indian war behold.
Dryden's Virgil

ELEPHANTI'ASIS. n. f. [elephantiaſis, Latin.] A ſpecies of lepreſy, ſo called from covering the ſkin with incruſtations like thoſe on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raiſe up aloft.

This ſubterraneous heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyſs. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raiſe with great conceptions.

Others apart ſat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reaſon'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate.
Milton

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in thoſe remote ſpeculations it may ſeem to be elevated with, it ſtirs not beyond ſenſe or reflection. Locke.

Now riſing fortune elevates his mind,
He ſhines unclouded, and adorns mankind.
Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mitchief ſwift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his creſt. Milton.

5. To leſſen by detraction. This ſenſe, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in uſe.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged againſt you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppoſe unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raiſed aloft.

On each ſide an imperial city ſtood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On ſeven ſmall hills. Milton.

ELEVA'TION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raiſing aloft.

The diſruption of the ſtrata, the elevation of ſome, and depreſſion of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a diſcerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their ſeveral degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehenſive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all poſſible application and elevation of ſpirit, with all the heart, ſoul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of ſtyle.

His ſtile was an elegant perſpicuity, rich of phraſe, but ſeldom any bold metaphors; and ſo far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of ſpirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker

6. The height of any heavenly body with reſpect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as thoſe which have more than ſeventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVA'TOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiſer or lifter up, applied to ſome chirurgical inſtruments put to ſuch uſes. Quincy.

ELE'VEN. adj. [ænbleyen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen ſons, and none leſs dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuouſly ſurfeit out of action. Shakſpeare.

ELE'VENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to ſpeak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welſh. Baxter's Gloſſ.]

1. A wandering ſpirit, ſuppoſed to be ſeen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this houſe give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowſy fire;
Every elf, and fairy ſprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakſpeare.

Fairy elves,
Whoſe midnight revels by ſome foreſt ſide,
Or fountain, ſome belated peaſant ſees,
Or dreams he ſees. Milton.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on every green.
Dryden.

If e'er one viſion touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurſe and all the prieſt have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light ſhadow ſeen,
The ſilver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels ſeem, we paint them elves:
And are but ſatires to ſet up ourſelves. Dryden.
However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fil'd it ſo well of himſelf.
Swift.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in ſo intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have ſuppoſed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair ſo matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hanmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots.
Shakſpeare.

E'LFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfiſh; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he ſlept ſoundly. Spenſer.

E'LFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knot of hairs twiſted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horſes in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul ſluttiſh hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much miſfortune bodes.
Shakſpeare.

To ELI'CITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To ſtrike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the ſame truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits thoſe acts out of the meer lapſed ſtate of human nature. Cheyne.

ELI'CIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from poſſibility to real exiſtence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekneſs; meekneſs being ordinarily annexed to theſe virtues. Hammond.

The ſchools diſpute whether, in morals, the external action ſuperadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. Sanderſon.

ELICITA'TION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.] That elicitation which the ſchools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELI'DE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to cruſh.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom theſe objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and ſtrength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELIGIBI'LITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthineſs to be choſen.

The buſineſs of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to chooſe them in conſequence of the report made by the underſtanding, as to their eligibility or goodneſs. Fiddis' Sermons.

E'LIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be choſen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A Britiſh miniſtry ought to be ſatisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private ſcheme is wiſeſt, they can perſuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the moſt eligible. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the leaſt abatement of thoſe conditions? Swift.

That the moſt plain, ſhort, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in ſome or all of theſe qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep diſtreſs, is more eligible than ſuſpenſe. Clariſſa.

E'LIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthineſs to be choſen; preferableneſs.

ELIMINA'TION. n. ſ. [elimino, Latin.] The act of baniſhing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELI'SION. n. ſ. [eliſio, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't, the attempt, there is an eliſion of a ſyllable.
You will obſerve the abbreviations and eliſions, by which conſonants of moſt obdurate ſounds are joined together, without any ſoftening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Diviſion; ſeparation of parts.
The cauſe given of ſound, that it would be an eliſion of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or elſe an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXA'TION. n. ſ. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or ſtewing any thing.
Even to ourſelves, and more perfect animals, water performs no ſubſtantial nutrition; ſerving for refrigeration, dilution of ſolid aliments, and its elixation in the ſtomach. Brown.

ELI'XIR. n. ſ. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by ſtrong infuſion, where the ingredients are almoſt diſſolved in the menſtruum, and give it a thicker conſiſtence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the ſhow'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymiſts hope to tranſmute metals to gold.
No chymiſt yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quinteſſence of any thing.
In the ſoul, when the ſupreme faculties move regularly, the inferior paſſions and affections following, there ariſes a ſerenity infinitely beyond the higheſt quinteſſence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating ſubſtance.
What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Loſt.

ELK. n. ſ. [ælc, Saxon.] A large and ſtately animal of the ſtag kind. The neck is ſhort and ſlender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyiſh, in ſummer it is paler. The horns of the male are ſhort and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with ſeveral prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, ſcarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies ſlumb'ring ſilent in the white abyſs. Thomſon.

ELL. n. ſ. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A meaſure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.
They are ſaid to make yearly forty thouſand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addiſon.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long meaſure.
Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleaſures as they come, but go:
Defer not the luſt virtue; life's poor ſpan
Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLI'PSIS. n. ſ. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which ſomething is left out neceſſary to be ſupplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.
The words are delivered by way of elliptis. Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the ſection of a cone, by a plane cutting both ſides of the cone, but not parallel to the baſe, which produces a circle, and meeting with the baſe when produced. Harris.
On the cylinder inclined, deſcribe an elliptis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins' Dædalus.
The planets could not poſſibly acquire ſuch revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipſes very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLI'PTICAL. } adj. [from elliptis.] Having the form of an ellipſis; oval.
ELLI'PTICK. }
Since the planets move in elliptick orbits in one of whoſe foci the ſun is, and by a radius from the ſun deſcribe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we muſt find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne.
In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greateſt diameter going tranſverſely from ſide to ſide. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. ſ. [ulmus, Lat. elm, Saxon.]

1. A tree.
The ſpecies are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by ſome called the Britiſh elm; the ſmooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themſelves by ſeeds and ſuckers in ſuch plenty as hardly to be rooted out: eſpecially in hedge-rows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or cloſe plantation, and then ſhade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they ſhould not be planted too near fruit trees: becauſe the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nouriſhment. Miller.

The rural ſcat,
Whoſe lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early ſpring, his airy city builds. Thomſon.

2. It was uſed to ſupport vines, to which the poets allude.
Thou art an elm, my huſband; I a vine,
Whoſe weakneſs married to thy ſtronger ſtate,
Makes me with thy ſtrength to communicate. Shakſp are.

ELOCU'TION. n. ſ. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent ſpeech.
A travelled doctor of phyſick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of ſpeaking; ſpeech.
Whoſe taſte, too long forborne, at firſt eſſay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for ſpeech to ſpeak thy praiſe. Milton.

3. The power of expreſſion or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.
The third happineſs of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought ſo found, and varied, in apt, ſignificant, and ſounding words. Dryden.
As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, ſo much more to expreſs thoſe thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. ſ. [eloge, French.] Praiſe; panegyrick.
Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vaniſh into praiſes and elogies. Wotton.
If I durſt ſay all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I ſhould offend the modeſty of our author. Boyle.
Some excellent perſons, above my approbation or elogy, have conſidered this ſubject. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.] To put at a diſtance; to remove one far from another. Now diſuſed.
From worldly care himſelf he did eloin,
And greatly ſhunned many exerciſe F. Queen.
I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou ſhalt do
To anger deſtiny, as ſhe doth us;
How I ſhall ſtay though ſhe eloigne me thus,
And how poſterity ſhall know it too. Donne.

To ELO'NGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to ſtretch.

2. To put further off.
The firſt ſtar of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very interſection which is now elongated and moved eaſtward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELO'NGATE. v. n. To go off to a diſtance from any thing.
About Cape Frio in Braſilia, the ſouth point of the compaſs varieth twelve degrees unto the weſt; but elongating from the coaſt of Braſilia, towards the ſhore of Africa, it varieth eaſtward. Brown.

ELONGA'TION. n. ſ. [from elongate.]

1. The act of ſtretching or lengthening itſelf.
To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are ſeparated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The ſtate of being ſtretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is ſo extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.
Elongations are the effect of an humour ſoaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be ſtretched, and to be thruſt quite out upon every little force. Wiſeman's Surgery.

4. Diſtance; ſpace at which one thing is diſtant from another.
The diſtant points in the celeſtial expanſe appear to the eye in ſo ſmall a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Sceptis.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.
The ſocial life with ſome is ſtyled profane
Who ſometimes thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial ſolace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELO'PEMENT. n. ſ. [from elope.] Departure from juſt reſtraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly uſed of a wife.
An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her huſband to live with an adulterer, and with whom ſhe lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.
The negligent huſband, truſting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

E'LOPS. n. f. [ἔλοψ.] A fiſh: reckoned however by Milton among the ſerpents.

Scorpion and aſp, and amphiſbena dire,
Cerafies horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipſas. Milton's Par. Loſt.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of ſpeaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakſp. Coriolanus

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flouriſh'd, ſince mute. Milton

His infant ſoftneſs pleads a milder doom,
And ſpeaks with all the eloquence of tears.
Waſh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say ſhe be mute, and will not ſpeak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And ſay ſhe uttered piercing eloquence. Shakſp.

Fit words attended on his weighty ſenſe,
And mild perſuaſion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant ſpeech.

The Lord of Hoſts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counſellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Iſaiah.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove
What duſt we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Pope

ELSE. pronoun. [elle, Saxon.] Other; one beſide: it is applied both to perſons and things.

To ſtand ſtarved with travel, and ſweating with deſire to ſee him; thinking of nothing elſe, putting all affairs elſe in oblivion, as if there were nothing elſe to be done but to ſee him. Sidney.

Should he or any elſe touch, he will find evidence of the Divine Wiſdom. Hale

He ſays, 'twas then with him, is now with you;
He did it when he had nothing elſe to do.
Denham

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwiſe.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beſide, by lot my due,
But ſtand aloof, and think profane to view:
This fault thou'rt, elſe, not Lucifer's match'd foe,
Theſe hoſtile fields ſhall fatten with thy blood.
Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we ſhould be aſſured, but either by an internal impreſſion of the motion of a God upon our minds, or elſe by ſuch external and viſible effects as our reaſon tells us muſt be attributed to ſome cauſe? Tillotſon

2. Beſide; except that mentioned.

Pleaſures which no where elſe were to be found
And all Elyſium in a ſpot of ground Dryden.

3. It has ſometimes or before it ſuperfluouſly.

Or elſe good night your vow. Shakſpeare.

E'LSEWHERE. adv. [elſe and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elſewhere. Abbot's Deſcr. of the World

As he proved that Piſon was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; ſo where to find them elſewhere he knew not. Raleigh's Hiſtory

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elſewhere,
Through glaſſy eyes open he, we cannot ſee. Davies

Hence forth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and ſacrifice
Shalt be conſul'd at Delphos, or elſewhere. Milton.

Although learned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elſewhere, yet new comers and children do not. Graunt.

2. In other places; in ſome other place.

They which elſewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meaneſt, it marvaileth, when the magiſtrate appointeth him what to wear, think the graveſt prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the miniſter to ſtand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elſewhere. Milton.

Beſtow, bale mute, thy idle threats elſewhere;
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear.
Dryden.

If it contradict what he ſays elſewhere, it is no new or ſtrange thing. Tillotſon

To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from baſe.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, ſo that the virtue of the ſeed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embaſed by the ground. Bacon.

I have no preſſure or ignoble end in my preſent labours, which may, on either ſide, reſtrain or embaſe the freedom of my poor judgment. Wotton.

I will rather chuſe to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whoſe embaſed pride is ſhortly to be levelled to dead. King Charles.

A pleaſure both rational and angelical; a pleaſure enbaſed with no concomitant ſting; but ſuch a one as being home, in the mouth, never turns to gall or grows four in the belly. South.

2. To degrade; to villify.

Joy of my life, while left me hours of heav'nly day
I ſpent with you, while left me lamps I ſaw
By which to read, while left me pow'r to walk,
While left me breath or being, this my care
Muſt be, with you, that was ſo lately pleaſed;
But chiefly the moſt worthy you, whom I
Moſt love, moſt fear, moſt honour and moſt pity,
Since the laſt parting, you have ſtood poſſeſt
Within my breaſt, as in your proper ſeat.
Unto which faithful mirror if you look,
You ſhall not there find reaſon to remove
Your ſelf, unleſs you will yourſelf deface
Your moſt reſemblance, and fair ſhape I bear,
That are ſo much by you miſ-held, ſo much
Both from the form and fafhion of myſelf
Unto your ſervice ever vowed, and chiefly
That are ſo much by ſo mean love embaſed.
Spenſer.

EMBA'SSADOR. n. ſ. [See AMBASSADOUR.] One ſent on a publick meſſage.

He ſends the angels on embaſſy with his decrees. Taylor.

3. An errand, in an ironical ſenſe.

A bird was made fly with ſuch art to carry a written embaſſage among the ladies, that one might ſay, If alive bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble miſchance, that art ſo light of foot,
Doth not thy embaſſage belong to me,
And am I laſt that know it? Shakſpeare.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The Engliſh are embattled;
To horſe! you gallant princes, ſtraight to horſe!
Shakſpeare.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thouſand other her defences, which now are too ſtrongly embattled againſt me. Shakſpeare.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton.

Embattl'd nations ſtrive in vain
The hero's glory to reſtrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain againſt his force conſpire. Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is ſhiny, and they ſay we ſhall embattle
By the ſecond hour of the morn. Shakſpeare.

To EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew.
Fairy Queen.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft my heart did steal away.
Fairy Queen.

2. [from bay.] To enclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.
Shakspeare.

To EMBE'LLISH. v. a. [embellir, Fr.] To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden.

The names of the figures that embellished the discourses of those that understood the art of speaking are not the art and skill of speaking well.
Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury

E'MBERING. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'rings well, and fasting days;
What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser.

E'MBERS. n. s. without a singular [æmyjia, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Illandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low
Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

E'MBERWEEK. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called ember weeks.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The thing appropriated.

To EMBLA'ZE. v. a. [blasonner, French.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Tu' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got.
Shakspeare.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd,
Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton's Par. Lost.

To EMBLA'ZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.

2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to show.

She had all the royal makings of a queen,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nicely on her. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

If you draw your heart in an emblem, shew a landskip of the country natural to the heart.
Peacham on Drawing.

Gentle Thames,
Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestick grace.
Denham.

He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws. Addison.

To E'MBLEM. v. a. [from the noun.] To represent in an occult or allusive manner. Not used.

The primitive sight of elements doth fitly emblem that of opinions. Glanville's Scepsis.

EMBLEMA'TICAL. EMBLEMA'TICK. } adj. [from emblem.]

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'st where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phœnix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLE'MATIST. n. s. [from emblem.] A writer or inventer of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematists, and heralds. Brown.

E'MBOLISM. n. s. [ἐμβολισμὸς.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manner in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Holder.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

E'MBOLUS. n. s. [ἔμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by an embolus, like the heart. Arbuthnot.

To EMBO'SS. v. a. [from bosse, a protuberance, French.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood?
Which once a-day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakspeare.

Thou art a boil,
A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shakspeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton's Par. Lost.

All crowd in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' emboss their hives in clusters. Dryden.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

Then o'er the lofty gate his art embossed
And Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. [from emboîsser, French, to enclose in a box.] To enclose; to include; to cover.

The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd
In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser.

A knight, her met, in mighty arms embossed.
Fairy Queen.

4. [emboscare, Italian.] To enclose in a thicket.

Like that self begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods embost. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, French, a tumour. Hunter.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his ſhield; the boar of Theſſaly
Was never ſo emboſt. Shakſpeare.
We have almoſt emboſt him: you ſhall ſee his fall to-night. Shakſpeare.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. ſ. [from emboſs.]

1. Any thing ſtanding out from the reſt; jut; eminence.
I wiſh alſo in the very middle, a fair mount, with three aſcents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breaſt; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embaſſments. Bacon

2. Relief; riſing work.
They are at a loſs about the word pendentif; ſome fancy it expreſſes only the great embaſſment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addiſon on Italy

To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, French.] To include in bottles; to bottle.
Strom, fierceſt fruit
Embottled long as Priamean Troy
Withſtood the Greeks, endures. Philips.

To EMBO'WEL. v. a. [from bowel.] To eviſcerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exenterate.
The ſchools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itſelf. Shakſpeare.
Embowelled will I ſee thee by and by;
'Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye. Shakſpeare's Henry IV.
The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noiſe the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton's Par. Loſt.
Foſſils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth
Diſplays. Philips.

To EMBRA'CE. v. a. [embraſſer, Fr.]

Fenton, Heav'n give thee joy!
What cannot be eſchew'd, muſt be embrac'd. Shakſpeare.
If a man can be aſſured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

6. To find; to take.
Fiennes, his ſon,
Whoſe abſence is no leſs material to me
Than is his father's, muſt embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

7. To ſqueeze in a hoſtile manner.

To EMBRA'CE. v. n. To join in an embrace.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to ſee thy honeſt ſon,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. Shakſpeare.

EMBRA'CE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Claſp; fond preſſure in the arms; hug.
Thames, the moſt lov'd of all the ocean's ſons
By his old ſire, to his embraces runs. Denham.

2. A hoſtile ſqueeze; cruſh.

EMBRA'CEMENT. n. ſ. [from embrace.]

1. Claſp in the arms; hug; embrace.
Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
In whoſe decay virtue's fair theme muſt fall. Sidney.
There cheriſhing one another with dear, though chaſte embracements, with ſweet, though cold kiſſes, it might ſeem that love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.

2. Hoſtile hug; grapple.
Turne beaſts, fighting with any man, ſtand upon their hinder feet; and ſo this did, being ready to give me a ſhrewd embracement. Sidney.

3. Comprehenſion.
Nor can her wide embracements filled be. Davies.

4. State of being contained; encloſure.
The parts in man's body eaſily reparable, as ſpirits, blood, and fleſh, die in the embracements of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

5. Conjugal endearment.
I would ſincerely rejoice in that abſence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. Shakſp.

EMBRA'CER. n. ſ. [from embrace.] The perſon embracing.
Yet are they the greateſt embracers of pleaſure of any other upon earth; and they eſteem of pearls as pebbles, ſo they may ſatisfy their guſt, in point of pleaſure or revenge. Howel.

EMBRA'SURE. n. ſ. [embraſure, French.] An aperture in the wall, through which the cannon is pointed; battlement.

To EMBRA'VE. v. a. [from brave.] To decorate; to embelliſh; to deck; to grace; to adorn. Not now in uſe.

And, with ſad cypreſs, ſeemly it embrave. Fairy Queen.

To EMBROCATE. v. a. [ἐμβρέχω.] To rub any part diſeaſed with medicinal liquors.
I returned her a glaſs with oil of roſes and vinegar, to embrocate her arm. Wiſeman.

EMBROCA'TION. n. ſ. [from embrocate.]

1. The act of rubbing any part diſeaſed with medicinal liquors or ſpirits.

2. The lotion with which any diſeaſed part is waſhed or embrocated.
We endeavoured to eaſe by diſcutient and emollient cataplaſms, and embrocations of various ſorts. Wiſeman's Surgery.

To EMBROIDER. v. a. [broder, Fr.] To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diverſify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raiſed figures of needlework.
Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.
Embroider'd ſo with flowers it had ſtood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.
Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a ſuit of her own embroidering. Spect.
Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This ſlave the floor, and that the table ſpreads. Pope.

EMBRO'IDERER. n. ſ. [embroider.] One that adorns clothes with needlework.
Blue ſilk and purple, the work of the embroiderer. Ecclus.

EMBRO'IDERY. n. ſ. [from embroider.]

1. Figures raiſed upon a ground; variegated needlework.
White,
In em'rald tufts, flow'rs purfled, blue and white,
Like ſaphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakſpeare.
Laces and embroideries are more coſtly than either warm or comely. Bacon.
Next theſe a youthful train their vows expreſs'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dreſs'd Pope.

2. Variegation; diverſity of colours.
If the natural embroidery of the meadows were helpt and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landſkip of his own poſſeſſions. Spectator.

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,
Pursu'd their track Dryden's Homer.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer, or more. Newton.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to fable night.
Dryden's Fables.

When, from dewy shade emerging bright,
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope's Odyssey.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson's Summer.

EME'RGENCE. } n. s. [from emerge.]

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies. Brown.

2. The act of rising or starting into view.

The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation. Boyle on Colours.

The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours. Newton's Opticks.

3. Any sudden occasion; unexpected casualty.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance rather than of philosophy. Glanville's Sceptis.

4. Pressing necessity; exigence. Not proper.

In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer. Addison's Freeholder.

EME'RGENT. adj. [from emerge.]

1. Rising out of that which overwhelms or obscures it.

Love made my emergent fortune once more look
Above the main, which now shall hit the stars.
Ben Jonson.

Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs uplieve
Into the clouds. Milton.

2. Rising into view, or notice, or honour.

The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent. Ben Jonson.

3. Proceeding or issuing from any thing.

The stoics held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

4. Sudden; unexpectedly casual.

All the lords declared, that, upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their forces upon their horses. Clarendon.

E'MERODS. } n. s. [corrupted by ignorant pronunciation from

They must be smooth, almost imperceptible to the touch, and without either eminence or cavities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. A place where one is exposed to general notice.

A satyr or libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous station. Addison.

5. Exaltation; conspicuousness; state of being exposed to view; reputation; celebrity; fame; preferment; greatness.

You've too a woman's heart, which ever yet
Affected eminency, wealth, sovereignty. Shakesp.

Attributions are attributed to the powerfullest under princes, whose the eminency of the object taketh the rest. Bacon.

He deserv'd no such return
From me, whom he created what I was,
In that bright eminence; and with his good
Upbraided none. Milton's Par. Lost.

Where men cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet religion makes a compensation, by teaching content. Tillotson.

These two were men of eminency, of learning as well as piety. Stillingfleet.

6. Supreme degree.

Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,
And pure thou wert created, we enjoy
In eminence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. Notice; distinction.

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo:
Present him eminence both with eye and tongue.
Shakspeare.

8. A title given to cardinals.

E'MINENT. adj. [eminens, Latin.]

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care,
I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and affright;
And every moment rises to the sight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light.
Dryden.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that creeth voluntarily, and by degrees mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows.
Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They tabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground.
Dryden.

ENCRO'ACHER. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till N'prune, with one general sweep,
Turns all upon the bottom stand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Power often creates right: usurpations, when they are confirmed by time, and acquiesced in, make a title; and he that will look back into records, and examine the first beginnings of most governments, will find reason to wonder at the power of encroachers. Clarissa.

ENCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowell.

Such is the per his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends
Siege, and defiance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If it be a man's known principle to draw all from his right, all men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. Advance into the territories or rights of another.

As every man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakspeare.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.
It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandize.
This is that science which would truly enlarge mens minds, were it studied. Locke.
Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be this indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shaksp. Henry v.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.
They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

To ENLA'RGE. v. n.
1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.
They appointed the chancellor of the exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars. Clarendon.
This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather wish the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.
The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh.

ENLA'RGEMENT. n. s. [from enlarge.]
1. Increase; augmentation; further extension.
The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.
The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us prisoners to our isle. Waller.
There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.
The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more fat quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.
The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.
Lieutenant,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shakspeare's Henry vi.
If thou holdest thy peace at the time, then shall their enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Esther.

3. Magnifying representation.
And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it, made enlargements too. Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.
He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLA'RGER. n. s. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that increases or dilates any thing.
We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ENLI'GHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.
Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

To ENLI'GHTEN. v. a. [from light.]
1. To illuminate; to supply with light.
God will enlighten my darkness. Psalms.
As one sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.

2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.
His eyes were enlightened. Sam.
Love never fails to master what he finds;
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden

3. To instruct; to furnish with increase of knowledge.
This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spectator.
'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rogers.

4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.

2. To make vigorous or active.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.
In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLI'VENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.
But fire th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled powers. Dryden.

To ENLU'MINE. v. a. [enluminer, Fr.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.
For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

E'NMITY. n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity.]

2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government. Spenser.

That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant. Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure. In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities, the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

ENO'RMOUS. adj. [enormis, Latin.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measure.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.

Nature here
Wanton'd, as in her prime; and play'd at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous bliss! Milton.

2. Excursive; beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye. Newton's Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time
From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakspeare's King Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure.
5. Exceeding in bulk the common measures: always used with some degree of dislike, or horror, or wonder.

A giant shepherd here his flock maintains,
Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,
A form enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature, or in face. Pope.

ENO'RMOUSLY adv. [from enormous.] Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodward.

ENO'RMOUSNESS. n. s. [from enormous.] Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENO'UGH. adj. [xenoh, Saxon; genah, Gothick; genoeg, Dutch. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb To have, or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.] In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why would'ſt thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hast gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENO'UGH. n. s.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in public employments. Temple.
